Mr. FLANDERS. This is the way the bill was presented to the General Accounting Office for their consideration of the legal aspects, and as I have said before on the floor of the Senate, there are rare times, God forgive me, when I regret that I am not a lawyer. The original section read as follows:

> There shall be paid to the President in equal monthly installments an expense allowance of $50,000 per annum, to assist in defraying expenses resulting to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which no tax liabilities shall accrue or accounting be made by him.

Mr. DONNELL. Who introduced that particular language?

Mr. FLANDERS. That language came—and I did not object to it—from the subcommittee, and was agreed to by them on December 23, 1948. It was submitted to the General Accounting Office for criticism. They took up certain legal aspects of the language which I am completely, absolutely, irrevocably, and eternally unable to pass judgment upon. But this is the way in which the General Accounting Office asked us to reword that provision:

> The President shall receive in full for his services during the term for which he shall have been elected compensation in the aggregate amount of $150,000 a year to be paid monthly, consisting of $100,000 for salary, and an expense allowance of $50,000 to assist in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which expense allowance no tax liability shall accrue and for which no accounting shall be made by him, and shall be entitled to the use of the furniture and other effects belonging to the United States and kept in the Executive Mansion.

In the viewpoint of the General Accounting Office, there was something dubiously illegal about the original wording, in spite of the fact that there were two lawyers and only one layman on the subcommittee.

Mr. DONNELL. Was there any suggestion made by the General Accounting Office that it would be impossible for the President to account for what he does with the $50,000?

Mr. FLANDERS. That question was not raised.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it happens that we raised that question, and the General Accounting Office representative said there would be nothing illegal about it. They advised the subcommittee to change the language of the bill, to separate the amounts and call $50,000 an expense account, as it was evident on the surface that the $50,000 was nothing more than an additional salary, part of which would evidently accrue to the President as a net gain. It was stated that it would not be constitutional to include it unless it should be designated as an expense account.

I shall read a statement made by the Senator from Vermont in the committee, which it may be he has forgotten. He was discussing with former President Hoover the same question, and Mr. Hoover called attention to the fact that, even if the President's salary were doubled, there would be very little gain accruing to the President. The Senator from Vermont made this statement——

Mr. FLANDERS. Will the Senator refer to the page?

Mr. WILLIAMS. At page 56 of the hearings of December 13 and 14, 1948, following what Mr. Hoover had said. I now read the statement made by the Senator from Vermont at that time:

> Well, one of the criticisms made of this proposal in the Eightieth Congress was the expense of a million dollars or so. Just on plain arithmetic, I suppose we could have figured out that Uncle Sam would get back a considerable part of that $1,000,000, but, of course, that is not the point at all.

But I say that is the point. An attempt is being made to raise the take-home pay of the President by an indirect method.

I talked with a gentleman in the General Accounting Office who stated that this was the only legal way they could raise the take-home pay of the President, by separating those two items, making the salary $100,000 and calling the other an expense account $50,000. Of course, it could be raised to four or five hundred thousand dollars, or to a million dollars; but the only way the President could be given an exemption from income tax would be to call part of it an expense account.

Mr. DONNELL. In doing that, Mr. President, they inadvertently failed to eliminate the word "compensation." I do not know whether it was done inadvertently, but the word was eliminated. The expense allowance of $50,000 is to assist in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of the President's official duties, although he did not need all of the $40,000 previously received; at least, it was not needed through 1948.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is true, Mr. President. If it was needed, there would be no objection on the part of the committee to its being accepted as an expense allowance.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I am not arguing against giving the President $50,000 or so much thereof as he may expend as an allowance for expenses. That is provided for in the amendment which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS], and I are sponsoring before this body. But we think—and we reiterate it as strongly as we can—that just as it is possible for the President now to account for $40,000, and just as I understand the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] is of the opinion that he could account for the $50,000, I say it is equally true that it is sound business judgment and wholesome legislation to require an accounting.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I think it might be worth while to read what Mr. Hoover stated about the expense of living in the White House. He said:

> Mr. HOOVER. I have not looked recently into the exact appropriations for allowances for the President, but in my time there was an allowance of $25,000 a year. However, it was confined to traveling expenses, purely official relationships and functions, and had nothing to do with the ordinary living in the White House.
> If there has been no change since that time, I should think the American people would be perfectly willing and glad to see the Government give board and lodging to the President. He does not get it now for he must pay his own board and that of numerous other people. He gets his lodging free, but even there he has to pay part of the upkeep cost. I should think the minimum cost to the President is somewhere between $25,000 and $30,000 a year of conducting the White House in such a fashion as it should be conducted.
> He must receive a great many guests that he cannot charge to his allowance account, and so forth. We want the White House to be the leading and gracious home of the Nation. At least, I feel the American people would want that to be.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I agree thoroughly with the remarks so well made regarding the desire that the White House be a gracious home in which our people can be entertained, but I fail to see anything in any argument which has been presented to indicate that the expense of operating the White House, the cost of soap, labor, material, food, clothing, and other things, cannot be listed on a piece of paper and filed under certificate of the President, just as is true in the case of the $40,000 to which reference has been made.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I shall yield in a moment.

Mr. President, earlier this afternoon I referred to the senior Senator from California, who is also now on the floor, and I mentioned the fact that in his State the legislature had considered a certain bill. We had been talking about the custom in various States. I do not recall my own State's having any fund available until a few years ago, at any rate, that could be used without some type of accounting. As I say, we were talking about the States and their requirements, and I mentioned this afternoon, as I again mention now since both Senators from California are present, the fact that only a few months ago the Legislature of the State of California, in its zeal to advocate and assist in passing a bill which would undertake to give to the State the tidelands, passed a bill providing a $25,000 appropriation for expenditure by a committee, with a provision that there should be no obligation to file vouchers with respect thereto. As I indicated earlier this afternoon, the press, certainly in California—I would not be sure about it here—distinctly called that fact to the attention of the public, and the Governor of the State, elected, as he was, as the candidate of both the Democratic Party and the Republican Party, did not sign the bill providing for the $25,000 payment.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

Mr. DONNELL. I shall yield in a moment. To my mind there can be no answer to the proposition that it is wholesome that when a public official handles money of any sizable amount and expends it, he should account to the people of the United States as to the purposes for which the money is used. The very illustration I have employed with respect to the State of California indicates that there is a revulsion in the minds of the citizenry of the country against any plan under which sizable amounts of money are handed forth for expenditure by public officials without an obligation to account.

I now yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the Senator has been stating to the Senate that there is an accounting with respect to the $40,000 that is allowed the President of the United States for travel expenses. The provision of the law specifically states that the President shall make a certificate only of the total amount he has spent during the year, as I understand. He does not make any itemized accounting whatsoever of the money he has spent for travel expenses. I merely wanted to call that to the attention of the Senator, because I think he has been quoting the provision incorrectly. The President makes a certificate of the amount he has spent and the balance on hand. As I recall, last year he had some money left in the travel-expense fund.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, as I stated earlier this afternoon, I have not read the statute with respect to the $40,000. It was given to us a few minutes ago for the first time this afternoon, and then by the Senator from Vermont. I read it now:

> There may be expended for or on account of the traveling expenses of the President of the United States such sum as Congress may from time to time appropriate, not exceeding $40,000 per annum; such sum, when appropriated, to be expended in the discretion of the President, and accounted for on his certificate solely.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. To my mind it is perfectly clear that the public official required to give a certificate as to how money was expended certainly would be required to say how it was expended. That is what the sponsors of these amendments are asking for in the instant case.

Mr. LUCAS. I challenge the Senator to show where the President of the United States at any time in the past has ever submitted an itemized statement, under a provision of the kind we are now discussing. It has been the custom, as I understand it, all down through our experience as a republic, for the President to make nothing more than a certificate of whatever amount is expended. This is the first time anyone has ever raised a question with respect to the expenditures being itemized by the President of the United States.

I wish to say to the Senator that we never had such argument as this when the Senate was voting on an increase in its salaries. We raised our salaries, we gave ourselves a $2,500 exemption for expenses, and the Senator spent no time on the floor of the Senate making the arguments then he is making now. He accepted that situation. In other words, we all have confidence in ourselves to spend the $2,500 which we get under an exemption, without accounting to anyone, but we have no confidence, according to the Senator's argument, in the President of the United States, in the Vice President of the United States, or in the Speaker of the House of Representatives. That is what it amounts to. Senators of the United States can do no wrong. We can spend the $2,500 the way we see fit, and no one is going to suspect us in our spending of it. But some Senators do not have any faith in the President of the United States in spending this money in the manner in which it should be spent. They want him to make an accounting; they want him to present an accounting for every item he spends in the White House, every time he buys a can of fruit, every time he engages a painter or a carpenter, every time he buys a ham, every time he sends a messenger boy across the street on an errand and so on ad infinitum. They want him to make an accounting—How absurd and ridiculous. He would have to have three bookkeepers and one certified public accountant to keep a record of the $50,000 he is getting for expenses for the White House down at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue.

To me it seems preposterous that we should spend time charging the President of the United States, a man elected to the highest office within the gift of the people, with not spending money honestly and accurately and fairly, as Senators are attempting to do in the amendments.

The Senator from Missouri even said in the beginning of his remarks that possibly the train the President used at one time, along last May, I think it was, might have something to do with this very provision we now have placed in this bill. Yet the able Senator from Vermont said that the individual responsible for it was not the President from the Senator's State of Missouri, but was the Honorable Herbert Hoover, former President of the United States, who was chiefly responsible for this provision. Harry Truman had nothing to do with it. Any implication on the part of the Senator from Missouri that the President is responsible for this provision does not square with the facts. As I said before, Harry Truman told me last night that he would rather not have a single dime of this money if there was any way for him to accomplish the real purpose of the bill, namely to take care of the men in the lower echelons, in the lower classifications, whom he needs to assist him in the enormous national and international responsibilities which have been thrust upon the shoulders of the Chief Executive of this Nation.

Mr. President, the Senator is wholly wrong. The amendments should be defeated, and especially so, in view of our own vulnerable position upon this point. We should not require the President of the United States, or the Vice President-elect, one of our own Members, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to make this type of accounting for these moneys, when we do not do so with our own expense accounts, and that is exactly what is being done when this kind of an argument is made.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. DONNELL. In a moment. In regard to the very vigorous presentation made by the distinguished Senator from Illinois, so skillfully and eloquently, so far as I am aware there has not been one word uttered upon the floor of the Senate this afternoon which has directly or indirectly charged the President of the United States with any improper conduct with respect to money, or with respect to anything else. However, there has been presented, as well as I can do it, the proposition that the stockholders of a great institution, namely, the people of the United States of America, are entitled to know what their money is spent for. I undertake to say that the men I see right before me now, who were Governors of the States wherein they reside only a few years ago, did not resent the requirements of their statutes, or perhaps of their constitutions, if there were such provisions requiring an accounting of money expenditures.

The distinguished senior Senator from North Dakota has told us that in his State every governor is required to account for every item of expenditure that exceeds the sum of $1. Is not that correct?

Mr. LANGER. That is exactly correct, and he does it under oath.

Mr. DONNELL. Let me ask the distinguished Senator, while he is on his feet, if he ever felt any resentment, or thought that there was any disgrace on him, when he was Governor of North Dakota, because of that provision of the law?

Mr. LANGER. Of course not, because it has been the law since we adopted a constitution.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. DONNELL. I promised to yield first to the Senator from Utah, but if I may continue for a moment, I say that it is equally possible to account for $50,000, for such purposes as are described in the bill, as expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of official duties, as it is in the case of the $40,000 covered by the statute to which reference has been made.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

With respect to the train that went to the West. I do not know whether it was paid for by the United States Government, or by the Democratic National Committee, or by the railroad companies, or who paid for it. I think, Mr. President, it is an entirely proper inquiry to propound as to who did pay for it. I am not ashamed for having mentioned that train here this afternoon. It went out to the West on the theory that it was on a nonpolitical expedition, and yet as the campaign proceeded we noted, or at least some of us did, that the reference to the so-called nonpolitical character became one of satire and of laughter. Obviously, Mr. President, it is proper to know who paid for that train. Furthermore, it is just as possible to put down in a certificate what the items of expense were, how many dollars were paid for the train, how many dollars were paid for food, as it would be to provide for expenses of any other item.

I now yield to the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] for his question.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, can the distinguished Senator from Missouri advise me whether or not the $50,000 provided for in the pending bill is in addition to the $40,000 which is now allowed?

Mr. DONNELL. It is. It is in addition to the $40,000, and it has no relation to it, except that it is in addition to it.

Mr. WATKINS. If the bill as it is now before us were to be passed it would mean, would it not, that $90,000 would be provided the President to use for expenses?

Mr. DONNELL. There will be $40,000 under the existing statute. There will be up to $50,000 more provided by the bill, but only such part of the latter $50,000, under our amendment, can be used as is covered by vouchers duly presented. But under the bill as it comes before us the entire $50,000 additional amount will be available to the President, with an express provision that no accounting shall be made by him. That is the provision that is before us in the bill. That provision, as I have indicated, says that he shall be allowed up to $50,000 additional, depending on what his expenses are, as properly vouchered.

Mr. WATKINS. I should like to make an observation with reference to what the Senator from Illinois said concerning Congress voting itself expense money for which it does not need to account. I was not here at the time action was taken on that measure, and I did not vote for it. If the question were up for action today I would not vote for such a measure. I think it is wrong in principle.

Mr. DONNELL. Permit me to interrupt the Senator from Utah to say that I previously made a similar statement twice this afternoon. Although I either voted for the Reorganization Act, or certainly approved it if a vote were taken on it without a record of the vote being made, yet I agree thoroughly with the Senator from Utah that it is unwholesome for either the legislative body, the executive branch, or the judicial branch to expend money without accounting for the purposes for which it was expended.

Mr. WATKINS. I wish to ask the distinguished Senator from Missouri if it is not true that all employees of the Government who have expense accounts, including Cabinet members, must render an accounting before they receive the expense money?

Mr. DONNELL. I have never studied the statute covering that point, but that is my impression.

Mr. WATKINS. It is my understanding that all employees of the Government have to render expense account vouchers for the money they have expended, before they can obtain the money. Should there be any different rule for Senators, members of the Cabinet, and the President than there is for other employees of the Government?

Mr. DONNELL. My answer is unequivocally "No."

I now yield to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, would the distinguished Senator from Missouri be content with the same sort of accounting in the cases we are now discussing as applies under existing provisions respecting expenditures, that is by certification?

Mr. DONNELL. I assume that the certificates state the purposes for which money is expended. I have not seen such certificates, but I do not propose to change the language of the amendment merely because other language was not clearly and closely drawn. I think we are entitled to have filed with the appropriate officer a voucher, just as the governors of the various States—certainly in many instances—file vouchers showing how money is expended by them.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I remind the Senator that many of the governors have so-called contingent funds, as to which they make no certificate at all. They are not required to make any kind of an accounting. Personally, I would be entirely content if the President of the United States made a certificate that he had spent a certain amount of money for expenses, without requiring him to present an itemized list. In the limited field we are talking about, covering the President, Vice President, and Speaker of the House, I would not require them to go around with notebooks in their pockets making records of every nickel they spend, and making that kind of detailed accounting. I am speaking of my own sense of the morals and the proprieties involved in this particular limited situation. I would take the word of any President of the United States that he had spent so much personal expense money, on his mere certification. I would suggest to the distinguished Senator from Missouri that when we cannot do that we shall have come to a very bad pass.

Mr. DONNELL. I certainly would believe the President of the United States on certificate; that is certainly true; but, Mr. President, at the same time, while we see vividly, from the language of the Senator from Colorado, the notebook that is being carried around, and the notes being made, nevertheless the President is not actually the man who is making the expenditures. He is not the man who goes across the street as the messenger boy. He is not the man who engages the train. The man who makes the expenditures certainly can file a voucher showing for what purpose the expenditures were incurred. I see no reflection, I see nothing that indicates that we have come to a miserable pass by requiring that that be done. I think we would be safe with the other plan. I should have no special objection to it from my own standpoint, but I feel that from the standpoint of sound bookkeeping, for a permanent record for the United States, we should have vouchers duly presented evidencing the expenditures of funds.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I simply want to say that the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado that our amendment be changed in order to allow the President to just file a certificate, without an accounting, would be most unsatisfactory to me, as one of the sponsors of the amendment. There is no office in the United States so high, or no person in the United States occupying high office, who should not be made to account for the expenditure of the taxpayers' money. The President of the United States, I hope, is still in principle the servant of the people of this country. He should be required as a servant of the people to report to the people the expenditures of operating the White House if he is to receive by this bill an extra $50,000 for that purpose. However, the real rub is that this entire expense proposal is but a subterfuge for hiding the real intent of the bill, namely, to increase the President's salary another $50,000 and call it an expense account. It is an immoral principle and I object to it.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I agree with that statement, and I want it distinctly understood that although I stated a moment ago that, so far as I am personally concerned, I would be willing to accept any certificate from any President of the United States—certainly I would, just as I would accept a certificate from many subordinate officials—nevertheless, in my opinion, the proper accounting practice would be best carried out by a provision such as is contained in the amendment now pending. It is not unreasonable. It does not require the President to go around with a notebook and make an entry every time he buys a postage stamp. That is obviously a total distortion of the actual situation, and the requirement of presentation of vouchers is reasonable and proper.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I simply want to point out that in this limited category, by analogy to long-continued practice in the States, I believe that many of our people—or it would not be a long-continued practice—are perfectly willing to carve out an exception to the usual accounting practices. Certainly I have no desire to have a keyhole or transom view of the personal expenditures of the President of the United States.

Mr. DONNELL. Neither do I desire any such thing, Mr. President. But we are entitled to have a record of expenditures. If an individual expends a thousand dollars for telegrams, we are entitled to know the purpose for which the telegrams were sent and to whom they were sent, and the amount expended.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I suggest that the present occupant of the White House has demonstrated that the matter can be left to his certification. That is demonstrated by the fact that he has accounted for a surplus during the time that he has had an expense fund.

Mr. DONNELL. I do not think, Mr. President, that answers the point involved here at all.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I will admit, if the Senator will again yield, that it does not answer the point, except that it goes to the practice, and that is important.

Mr. DONNELL. May I ask the Senator from Colorado if he knows of his own knowledge what is stated in the certificates that are issued in connection with the $40,000?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I hope it is in his certificate, as is any other certificate. I hope his certificate will be in substance that "I have spent so much expense money pursuant to authorization of a certain act of Congress." So far as I am concerned, if he will make such a certificate, that is sufficient. Nothing less than that would be satisfactory to the junior Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As one of the sponsors of this amendment, I am not so much concerned, perhaps, as is the Senator from Missouri, with the point he is making. I was talking with the Comptroller General regarding the point raised by the Senator from Colorado, and he stated that in his experience in auditing accounts, all the Presidents, including President Truman, had gone out of their way to list their expenditures, and that such expenditures were listed better by Presidents than by any other officers, and I agree with the Senator from Colorado that any President should be trusted.

Mr. DONNELL. As I understand, no difficulty has thus far been experienced in listing them in detail.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is certainly no criticism with regard to what has been done in the past.

Mr. DONNELL. And there is no reason why such accounting could not be rendered in the future, is there?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know of no reason.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. Is it not a fact that there is a very much larger sum than the sum we are discussing here, namely, a sum of several hundred thousand dollars now in the hands of the President under very similar regulations? Is the Senator from Missouri familiar with that fund?

Mr. DONNELL. I am not.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think I am correct. I think the fund approaches $1,000,000, for which he gives no accounting whatsoever. I believe that fact shows a recognition of the peculiar responsibilities of his office.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. I should like to invite the particular attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] to a matter with reference to which he has just stated his views.

As I understood him, he stated that he would be satisfied with the certificate of the President of the United States that he had spent so much money pursuant to a certain appropriation or a certain law, and that he would not be satisfied with anything less. This bill does not require any certificate of any kind. The payment is made monthly, as the salary payment is made monthly. There is no requirement of a certificate for any payment. The only certificate of the President is his endorsement on the back of the Treasury check, that he has received the money.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I hope the Senator from Missouri will accept the suggestion that the President be permitted to report his expenses on certificate, as he now does. I told the Senator from Missouri that I would vote for his amendments, and I will do so; but when I made that statement, I thought that the President was submitting itemized accounts, as do other employees of the Government. I find that he does not do so, but that he is required to report by certificate only the amount which he has spent.

I find also that that requirement was last reiterated by the Congress on August 2, 1946, only a little more than 2 years ago, when the limit on expenses was raised to $40,000.

I had intended to support the provision requiring the President to make reports to the Congress. I shall vote for the Senator's amendments because I promised to do so, whether or not he accepts the suggestion.

Mr. DONNELL. I do not insist on the Senator voting for them.

Mr. AIKEN. I will take the word of the President of the United States that his expenses have been so much, without requiring him to account for every pair of shoe laces. However, I point out that this requirement was last reiterated by the Congress about 2½ years ago. I believe that the President's party was in control of Congress at that time.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. May I inquire from the Senator how much longer he intends to take?

Mr. DONNELL. I was about to say that I think we should conclude this discussion shortly, and I shall endeavor to do so.

Mr. President, I think it is entirely true that none of us would question the word of the President of the United States as to an expenditure. My proposal is simply that, as a matter of sound business, as an example of the way business is transacted in the Government, these amendments should be adopted.

Let me conclude these observations with mention—which I think is proper—of a point which was made very forcefully by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. He took the position this afternoon on the floor that he was very much worried over the difficulty of determining what items would be properly included—in other words, that no standard is prescribed by law as to the duties of any of these officers.

In answer to that point, it seems to me, first, that if there is no standard, there should be a standard.

In the second place, the drafters of the bill have distinctly recognized that the duties of these officers are sufficiently defined in the law to determine what are expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of official duties, because the drafters of the bill have used that language not only once, but I believe three times in the course of the various sections. They have used the term "expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties." To my mind it is entirely possible for an adequate accounting to be made, and I submit that these amendments are wholesome and should be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Missouri. Under a previous order of the Senate, the amendments will be considered en bloc.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I have checked the emergency fund of the President, which is the item to which I referred previously. It has been in existence for many years under a similar provision, as I understand. Last year it was $200,000. In the current budget it is carried at $1,000,000. So that item will come under examination in the course of time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Missouri. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY (when his name was called). For the same reason heretofore assigned, I ask unanimous consent to be excused from voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Kentucky will be excused from voting.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BROUGHTON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senators from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN and Mr. MCGRATH] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is absent by leave of the Senate.

If present and voting, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BROUGHTON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senators from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN and Mr. MCGRATH], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 61, as follows:

So Mr. DONNELL's amendments were rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to be proposed?

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk. I shall state it briefly, and then ask that it be read.

The amendment applies to the term "compensation," on the first page of the bill, as it seems to be perfectly ridiculous, the General Accounting Office to the contrary notwithstanding, to call as "compensation" the sum of $50,000 which is allowed the President for expenses.

My amendment accordingly provides, on the first page, that "compensation" shall be "in the aggregate amount of $100,000 a year, to be paid monthly;" and I continue by striking out, on the second page, the words, "consisting of $100,000 for salary"; and then inserting the words "in addition," so as to read "and in addition an expense allowance of $50,000"—which it seems to me is a much more realistic presentation of the situation, and one which would do much more justice to what the Senate apparently contemplates in this enactment.

I now ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, in line 8, it is proposed to strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000".

On page 2, in line 1, it is proposed to strike out "consisting of $100,000 for salary."

On page 2, in line 2, it is proposed to insert, after the word "and", the words "in addition."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. LUCAS. I am familiar with the amendment. I think it is proper. I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I move to strike out the word "no" in the fifth line on page 2; to strike out the word "him" in line 6 on page 2; and to insert, after the word "by", at the commencement of line 6 on page 2, the words "his certification."

That would carry out the thought of having the President certify whatever his expenses may be.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, before we vote on that amendment, will the able Senator from Colorado give us an explanation of exactly what he means by "certification," because there are different interpretations of what a certification is, and different constructions have been placed upon that word during this debate this afternoon. So before we agree to the amendment, I should like to know what it means.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes. Mr. President, from the standpoint of the Senator from Colorado, "certification" means certification, that it is discretionary with the President whether he wishes to add any stuffing, that on certification alone the requirement would be met. That is the interpretation of the junior Senator from Colorado.

As I said during the debate I am not interested in having a transom or a keyhole view of the President's expenditures so far as personal affairs are concerned, where we cover them by appropriation, and I do not intend any such result; but if the President wishes to supplement his certification with a detailed accounting, I, of course, could have no objection.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator correctly, then, if the President of the United States is given this $50,000, and he certifies that he spent $47,000, that would be sufficient?

Mr. MILLIKIN. That would be sufficient, and in accordance with my intent in offering the amendment. It would be up to the President, whether he wanted to add anything else. I understand that is now the law, as it relates to the expenditures which have already been authorized.

Mr. LUCAS. I take it he could not draw it in monthly installments under the certification proposed?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I do not understand why not. I mean, that is an accounting procedure that I would not be familiar with, but I do not understand why not.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I know that is the custom in the executive offices of the Governor. It is done in precisely that way each month. He simply files a certificate.

Mr. LUCAS. I want to thank the Senator from Colorado for the observations he made a short time ago with respect to his confidence in the President of the United States. I also want to thank the Senator from Maine with respect to his statement of what the governors in his State do. That is exactly what is done in the State of Illinois. In other words, I think in most States the governors have been given a specific sum for expenses to take care of the mansion and other incidental expenses, and have never been required to make any itemized accounting such as has been requested and proposed to be required here this afternoon of the President of the United States.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. If that were done, it would cause the personal and official business to become mixed up to the point where, if a report were made of any kind, the newspapers, the columnists, and the radio commentators would be happy to come in and see each month what the President of the United States was doing, and what the Vice President was doing, and what the Speaker was doing, and they would eventually get to the question of what Senators of the United States were doing with respect to their $2,500—a perfect set-up for distortions. I say the proposal is utterly foolish.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator that when I was a young man I worked in a governor's office. The legislature of that State habitually gave the governor what we called a contingent fund, for which he did not even have to make a certification. All he had to do was to draw on it. He made no accounting at all. But I should say also, we took great pains against the possibility of future attack by keeping a very careful private account of it.

Mr. LUCAS. That is right, and the governor was absolutely correct in doing that. But if the time comes in this country when the governor of a State cannot be trusted, or the President of the United States cannot be trusted, or the Vice President, or the Speaker, to keep an honest account with respect to this little expense money without itemizing every item, then America is not very safe.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Oh, I agree entirely. Would it satisfy the point in the Senator's mind if the word "annual" were inserted before the word "certification"?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, certainly that would be desirable, because the President might spend twice as much money one month as he would spend in another month. It ought to be an annual certification.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Then, Mr. President, I would add the word "annual" before the word "certification."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado will be so modified.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will yield, I wonder if he would go further, when the various appropriation bills are presented this year, and whether he intends to endeavor through legislation to require the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations, the Chief of the Air Force, generals of every rank, and, as a matter of fact, all officers in the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, who have various allowances, to meet a similar requirement? Are we going to make the same requirement of Members of Congress? We do not make any certification.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Colorado, I hope, made it very clear awhile ago that his remarks on this subject apply only to the office of the Presidency, the Vice Presidency, and the Speaker of the House. We shall have to decide as to the others when we reach them.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield gladly.

Mr. WATKINS. When the Senator says "certification," does he mean that the certificate shall show that the money was spent for expenses?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes; it would naturally be that kind of certificate, because it would have to relate back to the enabling statute; and that is the nature of the statute.

Mr. WATKINS. That is what I wanted to get clear in my mind, whether the Senator intends that it shall be a certification that he spent the allowance for Presidential expenses.

Mr. MILLIKIN. For Presidential expenses, as authorized by this particular statute.

Mr. WATKINS. And not in a campaign?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Not in a campaign.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am not going to vote on the pending amendment, but I should like to know what it means, inasmuch as it applies to an office which I am soon to assume. The bill as reported provides that the expense allowance shall be paid in monthly payments. It is entirely possible that during any one month not half of the amount would be expended for the purposes indicated. It might be that in the following month twice as much as the monthly allowance would be expended. For efficient purposes, what sort of certificate would be required, for instance, of the Vice President or the Speaker, in order that he might draw the allowance monthly? Would he be allowed to draw it in monthly installments of equal amount, or would he draw only the amount for which he made a certificate at the end of the month? If the certificate were for only a part of the monthly payment out of a fund, would he be allowed to certify a larger amount in the following month, if the expenses had been larger than the one-twelfth of the entire amount that was paid?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, it is my understanding, under the explanations which have been made here, that the beneficiaries of this fund could draw it all out at once, that they could draw any part of it out from time to time and without it being any fixed, regular, stated time. They are required only to make an annual certification that it was for expenses.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understood the bill as written to provide that the allowance should be paid in monthly installments, which means an equal amount each month.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. On page 2, line 1, I think, the Senator will observe that equal monthly payments are required. How could that come about, if the recipient has to wait until the end of the year to make a certificate as to the amount he has expended?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I understood the distinguished Senator from Maine to state that under the practice——

Mr. BREWSTER. I think perhaps the Senator did not realize the purport of my amendment, which would strike out the provision as to the monthly payment of the $50,000, that was in the earlier provision. On the adoption of my amendment, that passes out.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator's amendment apply to all three of the offices?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes. I wanted to raise the question as to whether the annual certification would not present a difficulty. It seems to me it is much better to leave it "certification", because under the word "annual" the President necessarily would have to wait until the end of the year, and would be obliged to put up the $50,000 for expenses, with no means of recoupment. Certainly he could not certify, on July 10, that his expenses next June would be a certain amount. If it is left without the word "annual" he can file a monthly, bimonthly, or tri-monthly certificate and receive compensation for whatever his expenses have been.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think what the Senator from Colorado wishes to do, as I understand, and what the Senator from Kentucky is hoping will be done, as I understand, could be reconciled by making the salary part of the appropriation payable monthly, and the expense amount, payable if, as, and when the recipient desired to draw it. That could be done simply by transposing the words "be paid monthly" in connection with the $100,000 salary, saying nothing about when the $50,000 expense money would be paid, except that there would be a certification required annually for the expenditure of that fund.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Would the Senator please indicate where his words would come in, and what they are?

Mr. TYDINGS. Strike out the words "to be paid monthly" on page 2, line 1. It would then read "a year, consisting of $100,000 for salary." Then insert, "to be paid monthly"——

Mr. BREWSTER. That is already in, is it not?

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will wait just a moment, until the meaning is made plain, it would then go on to say, "and an expense allowance of $50,000 a year," which would not necessarily have to be paid monthly. It could, as the Senator from Colorado has pointed out, all be drawn in 1 day, 1 month, or 6 months, or a year, depending upon when the recipient desired to use the money. But the salary would be paid in 12 monthly installments. The only requirement, then, as the amendment has been redrafted, would be a certification for the expense money annually, at the end of the year. I believe that is what the Senator from Colorado desires, and I think it would meet the point of view of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, that is what the junior Senator from Colorado desires to do.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, if I heard the Senator from Colorado correctly, that is exactly what he stated when he suggested his amendment. My understanding of the amendment which was offered by him is that it provides compensation in the amount of $100,000 a year, to be paid monthly, and an expense allowance of $50,000. The provision for payment monthly goes fully to compensation and not to the expense account.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I shall yield first to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I do not understand that the Senator from Colorado is proposing any new restrictions on the President's fund. Congress has continued the proviso that the President shall certify each year as to what his expenses have amounted to during the year. The legislation which we are now considering proposes to drop the requirement that the President certify the amount of expense for the White House each year. The Senator from Colorado is certainly proposing no new restrictions.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I agreed to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator from Colorado stated that certification, so far as the President is concerned, is annual?

I wish to bring out the point that so far as I can see by reading the amendment handed to the Clerk, the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] does not apply to the Vice President or to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. I bring that out because the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] asked with reference to his expense account. Is the Vice President to be on a monthly basis as opposed to an annual basis for the President?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as I understand the situation the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine takes care of the contingency which the Senator from Colorado and I were discussing, so that the President's regular salary is paid in twelve regular installments, but his expense account can be drawn upon whenever the President desires, and there is an annual certification. If the Millikin amendment prevails for the present, and we have not corrected the comparable condition in which the Vice President's expense account and the Speaker's expense account find themselves, I suggest to the Senator from Maine, who has drafted the first amendment, that if he will redraft the language relating to the Vice President's and the Speaker's expense accounts, along the same line, I think the bill will be in consonance and every Senator will have what he seems to want.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I would explain to the Senator from Maryland that my amendment has been adopted, and the question is now on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN]. It seems to me better to omit the word annual and have it subject to one certification. The addition of similar language with reference to the Vice President and the Speaker of the House would bring about the same objective.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I should like to modify my amendment, and I would ask the Clerk to read my proposed modification.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 6, the words proposed to be inserted are, "his annual certification." The modification reads, "his certification."

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask if the amendment which has already been adopted referred to the President's salary and expense account. We have been assured by the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] that like language will be introduced as to the Vice President and the Speaker of the House. I should like to ask with reference to the Vice President's salary and expense account. If the amendment is agreed to, where will it leave the Vice President relative to the amount of expense to which he is entitled?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, it would be the intention of the junior Senator from Colorado to conform the language of the bill so that the same privilege is available to both the Vice President and the Speaker of the House. I understand that the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] is working on such an amendment at this time.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if I correctly understand the amendment, the President, the Vice President, or the Speaker of the House of Representatives can draw at any time desired the amount of money desired, and he is required to make certification whenever he draws it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. All I am seeking is information. I shall not vote on the amendment one way or the other. I should like to inquire if it is proposed to strike out the monthly installment entirely. I am endeavoring to find out what I have to do.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I will say to the distinguished Senator that it is my intention to conform the language relating to the Vice President and the Speaker of the House with the language relating to the President.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does it provide for an annual certification?

Mr. MILLIKIN. It requires certification at the time expense money is drawn out. The word "annual" has been taken out.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if that be the interpretation, then I want to ask again if the Vice President would have to finance himself until he drew out the money, in order to certify his expenses?

Mr. MILLIKIN. When the Vice President has a need for reimbursing himself for expense money within the limits provided for in the bill, he makes a certification at any time he wants to make it within the appropriating year, in such amounts as he wants to make it, within the over-all limitation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask if that means that he must certify that he has already expended the money or that he wants to expend it?

Mr. MILLIKIN. He must certify that he has expended the money.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the result is that the Vice President and the Speaker of the House have to finance the expenses to be covered by their allowances and then be reimbursed by a certification some time during the year.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I suggest to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky that it would be rather difficult to make a certification that money has been spent on an advance. I do not know of any practical way in which that could be done.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I realize that; and that presents a difficulty, because it is obvious that the same amount may not be expended each month for expenses incident to the two officers. It creates confusion in the mind of the recipient as to what his rights are. As I understand, under the language of the Senator's amendment, the officer certifies only what he has spent in any one month, and the amounts may be different each month, depending entirely on circumstances. I find it difficult to understand how he can comply with this requirement.

Mr. MILLIKIN. It is the intention of the junior Senator from Colorado that any time the distinguished Vice President or the distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives or the President finds that he has spent money attributable to this account he can clear it with a certification that he has spent it. Otherwise we would be operating on an advance basis. I have no intention of putting in an amendment to give advances for expenses before anyone knows what the expenses are.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. For purposes of clarity, would it not be better to follow the "$50,000" by the words "per annum," in the second line, the same as is done in line 19 on page 2 and line 5 on page 3? Otherwise, there may be some complications from the Comptroller General's office as to the amount.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I would accept the Senator's amendment to that effect.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not care to be a nuisance in inquiring about what the result may be, but to whom is this certificate to be presented, to the Comptroller General, the General Accounting Office, the Secretary of the Treasury, or to the Disbursing Officer of the Senate? Where is the certificate to be presented in order to allow these two particular officers to draw whatever they can draw out of this expense allowance?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I would assume that whoever officially pays that kind of money to the President would be the person to receive the certification, and the same would apply to the Vice President or the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the case of the Vice President, the Disbursing Officer of the Senate pays him.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I think that is true. I do not know how the matter is handled so far as the Speaker of the House is concerned. Nor do I know who directly pays the President, but whoever pays him is going to take the certificate to clear his account.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I suggest that there will not be too much difficulty about it. Since 1906 the law has provided for the allowance of travel expenses and for funds to the President for entertainment. It has always been provided that that is to be for the President, and the language is, "to be accounted for solely on his certificate," which is exactly the same thing the Senator suggests, so unquestionably the modus operandi has been worked out.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, to take a practical case as applied to the Vice President or the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Vice President could simply say, "I hereby certify that I require the sum of $1,500, or $2,000, or $360, in connection with the expenses of the duty of the office of Vice President."

Mr. MILLIKIN. I would put it slightly differently.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not mean to choose the words; I am getting at the spirit of it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I would say, "I require $1,500 to reimburse me for the expenses of my office, which I certify have been incurred under this statute."

Mr. TYDINGS. That certainly could be made the day the expense was incurred, or the day after.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Exactly.

Mr. TYDINGS. And the payments would come immediately.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Exactly.

Mr. TYDINGS. The whole purpose of the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado is to give to the Vice President, without any accounting, the money he needs whenever he needs it, but he will simply say so in writing.

Mr. MILLIKIN. If he will make his certification, and the same applies to the President and the same applies to the Speaker of the House, and of course all those officials are at liberty to make such supplemental accounting as they wish.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] as modified.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the event the $50,000 or the $10,000 which is certified as being required for expenses relating to the office is not spent, does the remainder stay in the Treasury? Does it revert back to the Treasury, or can it all be drawn out?

Mr. MILLIKIN. As I understand, we are making an allowance of expense money.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At a maximum?

Mr. MILLIKIN. If it is not spent, I imagine, in an appropriating period, it probably goes back into the general fund, and we would have to reappropriate it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, they can draw out only that which is expended in the course of their business?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I would say that is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In order that the matter may be clearly understood by the Senate, the clerk will state the amendment of the Senator from Colorado as modified.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

SEC. 102. The President shall receive in full for his services during the term for which he shall have been elected compensation in the aggregate amount of $100,000 a year, to be paid monthly, and in addition an expense allowance of $50,000 per annum to assist in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which expense allowance no tax liability shall accrue and for which accounting shall be made by his certification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I would call attention to the fact that the amendment as read by the clerk does not cover the Vice President or the Speaker.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We have not gotten to that yet. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. (Putting the question.) In the opinion of the Chair, the "noes" have it.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, in view of this vote, I should like to clarify the situation. I think my amendment was agreed to. The other amendment simply applies to the certification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question was on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BREWSTER. Which was not the one read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Maine was agreed to.

Mr. BREWSTER. That is correct.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine said the amendment voted on was not the one read. I am now completely at sea. I desire to know what amendment we just voted on.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote was on the certification amendment presented by the Senator from Colorado, and in the opinion of the Chair it was rejected.

Mr. KNOWLAND. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Would a division be in order on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The result has already been announced.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the confusion, I ask unanimous consent, notwithstanding the announcement of the Chair that the amendment was defeated, that a division be allowed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BREWSTER. I should like to have the situation clear. Is it understood that the amendment which I proposed has been agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. BREWSTER. And that the only question is now about the proposal of certification made by the Senator from Colorado?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct. [Putting the question.]

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY (when his name was called). Under the same circumstances referred to before, I ask to be excused from voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Kentucky is excused from voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BROUGHTON], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senators from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN and Mr. MCGRATH] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is absent by leave of the Senate.

If present and voting, the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senators from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN and Mr. MCGRATH], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 38, as follows:

So Mr. MILLIKIN's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief explanation of the vote I have just cast. I voted against the certification requirement because in my judgment it is perfectly clear from the discussion this afternoon that the real purpose of the alleged expense account has been to increase the salary of the President of the United States. There is no real desire on the floor of the Senate, in my judgment, to make the President of the United States give a true accounting of his expenditures. I am not one who believes in voting for mere form. I think that the amendment we voted on in regard to certification was nothing but an empty gesture, a matter of empty form. Unless we are willing to do directly what we ought to do I am not going to seek, by way of indirection, to put on the books what I consider to be a matter of empty form. It is a subterfuge to conceal what the proponents do not want to do directly, namely, grant the President a $150,000 salary.

I repeat, the President of the United States ought to be required to give a full accounting of $50,000 of the taxpayers' money allegedly given to him in this bill for the purposes of running the White House. The people ought to know what that money is spent for. We should not allow the President to get away with the $50,000 by simply filing a mere formal certification that he used it for expense money. Thus, if we cannot have a full accounting, my vote necessarily had to be "no" because I think there is a great moral principle involved in this matter.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I desire to say that my vote of "nay" on this amendment was for the reason that I think the proper method of handling this matter is by accounting which states what the items were for which the expenditures were incurred—not a mere certification. Furthermore, it is entirely possible that the accounting could be definite, certain, clear as to what the items were. A mere statement that the moneys have been used for expenses relating to the office to my mind is not proper, is not the proper example for the public, is not the proper example for the United States Government, and my vote was "nay" for that reason.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that in the event Senate bill 103 is passed by the House without amendment, the President pro tempore be authorized to sign the enrolled bill after the adjournment of the Senate today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it has just been called to my attention that the only office which we are acting upon which must be acted upon prior to January 20 is that of the President, and that after January 20 we can still act on these expense accounts in the committee, and perhaps reach a more intelligent conclusion as to what we should do. With that thought in mind, Mr. President, I move to strike out, beginning on page 2, line 1, after the word "year", all the remainder of the bill, inserting a period after the word "year." That strikes out all action with respect to the salaries of the Vice President and the Speaker.

Article II, section 1, paragraph 6 of the Constitution provides as follows:

> The President shall, at stated times, receive for his services, a compensation which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that period any other emolument from the United States, or any of them.

There is no reference to the Vice President or Speaker, and we can take action with respect to them at some later date. There seems to be quite a difference of opinion on the question, and that is why I am offering my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware. [Putting the question.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the "noes" have it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware has asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I suggest to the acting majority leader the point of no quorum.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska suggests the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Aiken | Holland | Millikin |
| Anderson | Humphrey | Morse |
| Barkley | Hunt | Mundt |
| Brewster | Ives | Murray |
| Butler | Jenner | Myers |
| Cain | Johnson, Colo. | O'Conor |
| Chapman | Johnson, Tex. | O'Mahoney |
| Chavez | Johnston, S. C. | Pepper |
| Connally | Kefauver | Robertson |
| Cordon | Kem | Russell |
| Donnell | Kerr | Saltonstall |
| Douglas | Kilgore | Schoeppel |
| Ecton | Knowland | Smith, Maine |
| Ellender | Langer | Smith, N. J. |
| Ferguson | Lodge | Sparkman |
| Flanders | Long | Stennis |
| Frear | Lucas | Taft |
| Fulbright | McCarthy | Taylor |
| George | McClellan | Thomas, Utah |
| Gillette | McFarland | Thye |
| Gurney | McKellar | Tobey |
| Hayden | McMahon | Tydings |
| Hendrickson | Magnuson | Watkins |
| Hickenlooper | Malone | Wherry |
| Hill | Martin | Williams |
| Hoey | Maybank | Young |

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina in the chair). Seventy-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there seems to be a difference of opinion as to whether or not the President would be the only one included. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment may be withdrawn.

The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. MORSE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as I have heretofore made, I ask unanimous consent to be excused from voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the Senator from Kentucky is excused from voting.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BROUGHTON], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senators from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN and Mr. MCGRATH] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is absent by leave of the Senate.

If present and voting, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BROUGHTON], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senators from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN and Mr. MCGRATH] the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is unavoidably detained. If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 68, nays 9, as follows:

YEAS—68

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Aiken | Hoey | Maybank |

| Bricker | Green | Vandenberg |
| Bridges | McCarran | Wagner |
| Broughton | McGrath | Wiley |
| Byrd | Miller | |
| Capehart | Neely | |

So the bill (S. 103) was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended in accordance with an amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I renew my previous request, by asking unanimous consent that in the event Senate bill 103 is passed by the House of Representatives without amendment, the President pro tempore be authorized to sign the enrolled bill after the adjournment of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMPENSATION OF HEADS AND ASSISTANT HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS—ADDITIONAL BILL INTRODUCED

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], and myself, I ask unanimous consent to introduce at this point for appropriate reference a bill to increase rates of compensation of the heads and assistant heads of executive departments and independent agencies.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 498) to increase rates of compensation of the heads and assistant heads of executive departments and independent agencies, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

CHARTER OF ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY FROM CHARTER

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate remove the ban of secrecy with regard to the charter of the Organization of American States, Executive A, Eighty-first Congress, first session, which was sent to the Senate today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the ban of secrecy is removed from the charter, and the charter, together with the President's message of transmittal, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and the President's message will be printed in the RECORD.

The President's message is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the Charter of the Organization of American States, formulated at the Ninth International Conference of American States, and signed at Bogotá, Colombia, in the English, French, Portuguese, and Spanish languages on April 30, 1948, by the plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and by the plenipotentiaries of the other American Republics.

I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report which the Acting Secretary of State has addressed to me in regard to the Charter above mentioned, together with a copy of the report of the United States delegation on the Bogotá Conference.

The principles, purposes, and provisions of the Charter have my complete and wholehearted approval and I am happy to recommend the Charter to the favorable consideration of the Senate.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 13, 1949.

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR SAFETY OF LIFE AT SEA—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY FROM CONVENTION

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate remove the ban of secrecy with regard to the international convention for the safety of life at sea, Executive B, Eighty-first Congress, first session, which was sent to the Senate today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the ban of secrecy is removed from the convention, and the convention, together with the President's message of transmittal, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and the President's message will be printed in the RECORD.

The President's message is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1948, signed at London on June 10, 1948, by the respective plenipotentiaries of the Government of the United States of America and the governments of 27 other states.

The character of the convention, which is intended to replace the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea signed at London on May 31, 1929, is explained in the enclosed report of the Acting Secretary of State.

I also transmit, for the information of the Senate in connection with its consideration of the convention, a certified copy of the Final Act of the International Conference on Safety of Life at Sea, 1948, held at London from April 23 to June 10, 1948, and a copy of the report of the delegation of the United States of America to that conference.

CONVENTION OF WORLD METEOROLOGICAL ORGANIZATION—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY FROM CONVENTION

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate remove the ban of secrecy with regard to the Convention of the World Meteorological Organization, Executive C, Eighty-first Congress, first session, which was sent to the Senate today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the ban of secrecy is removed from the convention, and the convention, together with the President's message of transmittal, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and the President's message will be printed in the RECORD.

The President's message is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the convention of the World Meteorological Organization, in the English and French languages, which was opened for signature at Washington on October 11, 1947 for a period of 120 days, and was signed, during that period, by representatives of the United States of America and of 41 other states.

In this connection, there is transmitted herewith a certified copy of a protocol which was also opened for signature at the same time as the convention.

I also transmit, for the information of the Senate, the report made to me by the Acting Secretary of State regarding the aforementioned convention.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 13, 1949.

INTER-AMERICAN CONVENTION ON GRANTING OF POLITICAL RIGHTS TO WOMEN—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY FROM CONVENTION

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate remove the ban of secrecy with regard to the Inter-American Convention on the Granting of Political Rights to Women, Executive D, Eighty-first Congress, first session, which was sent to the Senate today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the ban of secrecy is removed from the convention, and the convention, together with the President's message of transmittal will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and the President's message will be printed in the RECORD.

The President's message is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the Inter-American Convention on the Granting of Political Rights to Women, formulated at the Ninth International Conference of American States, and signed at Bogotá, Colombia, on May 2, 1948, by the plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and by the plenipotentiaries of other American Republics.

I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report which the Acting Secretary of State has addressed to me in regard to this convention.

The purpose of this convention, and the principle underlying it, have my complete and wholehearted approval and I am happy to recommend the convention to the favorable consideration of the Senate.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT RELATING TO QUALIFICATIONS OF ELECTORS

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, some hours ago I sent to the desk, for introduction and proper reference, a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment. It was introduced for the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BROUGHTON], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], and myself. I had expected to ask unanimous consent to make a statement regarding the joint resolution; but because of the lateness of the hour I simply ask now that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD, showing the introduction thereof.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 34) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, relating to the qualifications of electors, introduced by Mr. HOLLAND (for himself, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. O'CONOR, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. LONG, Mr. HOEY, Mr. BROUGHTON, and Mr. ROBERTSON), was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax or to meet any property qualification.

"SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

INAUGURATION HOLIDAY FOR GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES IN THE DISTRICT AND METROPOLITAN AREA

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], who is chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported today Senate Joint Resolution 16, making January 20 and 21 of this year holidays for Federal employees and employees of the District of Columbia in the metropolitan area of the District of Columbia. Unanimous consent is required to take up the joint resolution at this time. I hope it may be granted, and that we may complete action on it today. Otherwise, we shall have to adjourn until tomorrow, and have a session then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the distinguished majority leader why it is necessary that we have a legislative enactment setting aside these two days for a holiday.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me say to the distinguished minority leader that it is my understanding that in the past all inaugural days have been a holiday for employees in the District of Columbia, either through an Executive order by the President of the United States or through congressional action.

This inauguration falls on Thursday the 20th of January. Of course, Friday will be the 21st; and Saturday and Sunday will be holidays in the regular course. Many persons from all over the United States will be coming to this inauguration. Many friends and relatives of Senators upon both sides of the aisle will be here. In view of the fact that one day definitely will be a holiday it was thought that it would be just as well to include the next day, which is Friday. That will give the employees 2 days as a holiday or vacation.

I may say to my friend the Senator from Nebraska that I think on inauguration day there will be quite a celebration. I understand that the number of people coming to Washington next week possibly will be greater than the number who have come to any other inauguration in the history of the United States, and I think there will be a rather gay and glorious patriotic time around the Capital. I may add that there is to be an inaugural ball and a general celebration all over the city, and I assume that probably the employees would like another day for vacation, on Friday, after the night before.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the majority leader for the explanation as to the holidays. I am not at all quarreling with the celebration that is expected to be put on. In fact, I do not know whether the acting majority leader knows it or not, but I happen to be one of the members of the inaugural committee that is trying to provide the facilities and help as much as possible in carrying out the inaugurational program. But that is not the question I asked my distinguished friend. What I want to know is, Why does there have to be legislative authority for this? I have not checked the history of it, but in times gone by I think it has simply been done by executive decree or proclamation.

Mr. LUCAS. I may say to my friend it has, with respect to 1 day. It so happens that this year Inauguration Day falls on Thursday, and the President of the United States feels that the holiday period should be extended to 2 days. He does not desire to take all the responsibility for it; but he would like to go along with the Congress in making it 2 days.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not going to object to the unanimous-consent request, because the Senate, I understand will not convene until next Monday. The resolution was reported today, and it would have to lie over 24 hours, in order to be brought up in regular order. I think there is no doubt that we want to cooperate in the inauguration. For that reason, I shall offer no objection to the unanimous consent. I should like at this place in my remarks however to include a short statement relative to the authority the President now has to make Inauguration Day a holiday by proclamation. For that reason, I wanted to know why it was necessary to have a legislative enactment, when there is a custom that has been followed in inaugurations gone by.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

The President has the authority to make January 20 and 21 holidays for Federal employees and employees of the District without the necessity of any congressional action. In 1923 the Acting Attorney General rendered an opinion to the President (33 Op. Atty. Gen. p. 485) stating that the power to close the executive departments and independent bureaus in the District of Columbia and the District government offices, whenever he deems proper in the interest of the public service, is inherent in the President. The opinion points out that there are numerous precedents for such action, none of which have ever been questioned, and cites 22 Opinions of the Attorney General 472, 474, for additional precedents. Since 1923 this power has been exercised on numerous occasions both with respect to employees in the District and with respect to employees in the field service.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I think so long as we are going to have many functions going on, taking on the characteristics of a Roman holiday, that the Government employees certainly ought to be allowed to share in it and observe it. However, I do want to say that when I compare the plans being made for this inauguration with the very simple and dignified inauguration that last occurred in this city, down on the lawn of the White House, it is most unfortunate that we are wasting the great sums of money which are being spent on the inauguration. I think it is another bit of proof of my remarks made earlier this afternoon, when I commented upon the expenditures that are laid out in the city of Washington, D. C., under the name of social functions. When I think of the thousands of dollars which are going to be spent unnecessarily on this inauguration, I wonder what has happened to the word "economy." I am led to believe that the inauguration is a fitting introduction to what has every evidence of becoming anything but an economic administration.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I do not know that I shall object, I should like to ask the acting majority leader a few questions. I understood him to say—which, of course, is correct—that every previous Inauguration Day has been a holiday, and I do not think on either side of the aisle there is any question about that. I should like to inquire, however, whether to his knowledge there has heretofore ever been a case, and I imagine that Thursday has been an Inauguration Day a number of times in the country's history, when a 2- or 3-day holiday has been granted for the inauguration?

Mr. LUCAS. Saturday, of course, is a holiday anyway. I cannot answer that question, I will say to my friend from California. It may be that some member of the Committee on the District of Columbia can answer it. I am merely presenting the joint resolution, because the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH] was compelled to go to New York.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from California will yield, I might answer his question. Only during the past 3 or 4 years has Saturday been a holiday among Government employees. Heretofore there has been no Saturday holiday in the District of Columbia, and the joint resolution is offered because of Saturday now being a holiday, and it would have to be, anyway, even if there were no inauguration. It was thought that inasmuch as Thursday is a holiday and Saturday is a holiday, there is no particular point in requiring the Government employees to work on Friday.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, still reserving the right to object, I should like to make an observation and ask whether the majority leader had given thought to it. People will be coming into Washington in order quite properly to take part in the inauguration of the President of the United States, and they will be coming in regardless of partisanship, because the man being inaugurated is President of the entire United States and not of any one political party. But when they come into this city, it might well be that with the expense they are undergoing, they might have some public business to transact, if the public offices were open on Friday. After they had participated in the inauguration of the President of the United States and paid their respects to him, it seems to me that they then might want to carry on some public business in some of the public offices. Under this arrangement, it seems to me they would have to stay over two extra days or three extra days in order to transact any public business in their Nation's Capital.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I think the record should be clear that this is only a holiday for the employees. As I understand, the banks did not want it made a regular holiday, which would compel them to remain closed on Friday. So that this is not a holiday, to all intents and purposes.

Mr. LUCAS. No.

Mr. FERGUSON. It is merely to give a vacation to the employees designated in the bill itself; is it not?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct. It does not apply to business houses at all.

Mr. FERGUSON. It does not apply to them as a holiday.

Mr. WHERRY. The resolution applies only to the metropolitan area. It does not extend beyond that; does it?

Mr. LUCAS. I think it extends to Virginia.

Mr. WHERRY. It would extend only to the metropolitan area; would it not?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to say that I have yet to find any justification for a holiday on Friday. It is entirely different from situations of this kind that might occur when there is a normal national holiday, and the employees of the Government might be going home for a vacation, and they might need an extra day, in which case as a gesture to their convenience and their good times, an extra day is often given. This is a celebration to be observed in Washington only. There is no occasion, so far as I know, for employees going to their distant homes and no advantage in giving them another day for that fundamental purpose. I see utterly no justification. I do not believe that I shall object to the Senate acting on the resolution, if they care to act on it today, but certainly I see no justification for an extra holiday at public expense on Friday, merely because Saturday happens to follow Friday, and Sunday happens to follow Saturday, and they all three follow the inauguration. I feel that it is setting a dangerous, bad, and ill-advised precedent. I might not oppose it at all, and I might support such a move, if it were a day following Thanksgiving. I have voted for such holidays, if they really served the convenience of the people in the District for travel purposes or added time with their families, or something of that kind. But in this instance there is nothing but the stoppage of Federal work for 1 day, with an excuse that I have been unable to find, in any explanation, or in the resolution itself. I shall not object, if the majority wants to have it done, as a vacation for the people in the District. I shall not object to the consideration of the resolution, but I want to say now that, without further justification, my conscience will not permit me in the public interest to support this extra holiday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the joint resolution is passed.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator, and I thank the Senate. Before I take my seat, let me say just one word in response to what has just been said.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I did not hear the ruling of the Chair. I realize I am a little late on the decision, but my understanding was there was no objection to considering the joint resolution. Was it also passed? There was no opportunity for anyone not in favor of the resolution even to express himself, before final action was taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the ruling of the Chair will be rescinded. Any Senator who wants to be heard on the joint resolution will be heard. The resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. There being no further amendment, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 16) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUTHORIZATION FOR SIGNING OF ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that in the event the House of Representatives passes Senate Joint Resolution 16 without amendment, the President pro tempore be authorized to sign the enrolled joint resolution after the adjournment of the Senate today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ALLEGED EXTRAVAGANCE IN CONNECTION WITH INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief reply to what my good friend from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] said a moment ago regarding extravagance in connection with the coming inauguration of President Truman. I am surprised that my friend did not know that the Republican committee, before the election on November 2, had full charge of making all contracts with respect to this inauguration. It is my understanding that no Democrat was consulted as to what was to be done. The truth of the matter is that they built the stands for the inauguration of Mr. Dewey, not Mr. Truman, and the contracts were let by the Committee on Rules and Administration, of which my former colleague, former Senator Brooks, was chairman.

The Democrats had nothing to do with the $100,000 which is being spent here. The contracts were let before we came into power. We suggested that something be done, if possible, to do exactly what the Senator from Oregon has referred to; in other words, to cancel the contracts, if possible, have the inaugural ceremonies upon the White House balcony, which was built by the President of the United States, for which many people criticized and condemned him, and let the people of the country extract such amusement as they could from that situation. But the contracts had been let and could not be terminated.

So I want my friend to know that any extravagance in connection with the inaugural ceremonies must be laid to the Republicans, and not to the Democrats.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I want to assure the Senator from Illinois that he cannot shuffle off responsibility quite so easily.

Mr. LUCAS. I am doing it, however.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator is trying to. I want to say to the Senator from Illinois that I am aware of the fact that some Republicans apparently entered into an agreement to waste a great deal of lumber in front of the Capitol in anticipation of a Republican inauguration. But I want to say that I have also gone into the factual questions behind the type of statement which the Senator has just made on the floor of the Senate, because I have been reading statements similar to his made to the press by other Democrats. The facts will not bear out the statement of the Senator from Illinois, if he means to assert that the Democrats have not been adding to the expense of the inauguration ceremonies. There are many items which the Democrats have added to the costs, including some amusing ones. I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the calliope which will tag end the circus and which was not in the original plans for the inauguration. I think the Senator knows me well enough to know that the division caused by the middle aisle of the Senate does not make any difference, so far as I am concerned, in trying to protect the people's money. The Democrats should have made some rescission of the plans, if the Senator thinks the Republicans are responsible for the waste. It will not be found in the record that any such rescission was attempted.

I simply wish to say that this inauguration, in my judgment, entails the waste of many thousands of dollars of the taxpayers' money which should be saved.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. LUCAS. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 17, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 13, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Everlasting God, the Father of all men, we pray that our responsibility to our country may be revealed through our thoughts, our speech, and our works. Give us, O God, a faith that will not shrink from criticism, that seeks to do our whole duty to our people.

Whatever hardship may be entailed, make our daily procedure altogether worthy of the confidence of our fellow men. O come richly and abundantly to our beloved homeland, with a tremendous surging of brotherhood in the soul of our Republic. In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 10, 1949, was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

Mr. SOMERS appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

EXEMPTION FROM TAX OF CERTAIN TICKETS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight next Saturday to file a report on House Joint Resolution 85.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. HALLECK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I am not going to object, will the gentleman from North Carolina explain what this joint resolution seeks to do?

Mr. DOUGHTON. This House joint resolution exempts from tax amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Programs on the occasion of the inauguration of the President of the United States in January 1949.

Mr. HALLECK. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have a little explanation of the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. This is a resolution similar to what has been passed on other occasions. It has been introduced and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. The Committee on Ways and Means will consider it. This is a unanimous-consent request that the committee have until midnight Saturday to file a report.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. What is the request?

Mr. McCORMACK. That the committee have until midnight Saturday to file a report.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. To file a report respecting what?

Mr. McCORMACK. Respecting the resolution which would exempt from the payment of the miscellaneous tax sales of tickets sold in connection with the ceremonies relating to the inaugural by the Inaugural Committee.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman tell the House why these tickets should be exempted from taxation?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, that question will be discussed later.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I trust the gentleman from Ohio will not object. This is simply a request to file a report by Saturday night, a request that has been made many times by legislative committees, and the practice is one that has always been followed so far as I know.

Now, whether or not action should be taken on it afterward is a question to be determined by the House.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. My purpose is to bring before the House the underlying purpose and the real facts relating to this subject.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether this just applies to tickets for seats or does it include many other exemptions other than tickets?

Mr. McCORMACK. It applies to admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies.

Mr. RICH. How far does it go beyond the sale of tickets for seats along the parade route?

Mr. McCORMACK. Without committing myself, that will be brought out later, but I should imagine it would probably apply to the inaugural ball and only official activities authorized by the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies, which has been officially appointed for the purpose.

Mr. RICH. If it does apply to more than seats along the parade route, are we going to have an opportunity to know about those things before we vote?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] that we are getting ready to inaugurate a Democratic President on a Republican platform.

That platform was built to inaugurate Mr. Dewey on, and it cost a great deal of money.

Therefore, these tickets are rather high; and this measure is designed to lighten the burden of the individuals who come to witness the inauguration.

Mr. RICH. Then they ought to pay a tax on these tickets, in order to help defray the expenses of the inauguration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order I have for today be vacated and that I may be permitted to address the House for 1 hour on Monday next following the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of special orders heretofore granted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of deceitful propaganda.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 15 minutes today following the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of special orders heretofore granted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Speaker, numerous reports have reached me in the last few days that hotels in Washington are overcharging for rooms during the period of the inauguration. I do not know whether rates have been raised generally, and it may be that only a few hotels are overcharging. I know of one instance where a friend of mine from down in our district was quoted a price, for two ordinary adjoining rooms, of $38 per room, $76 per day, with a requirement for a minimum of 3 days' occupancy and an advance deposit of $200. I personally know that the price so quoted is at least four or five times the amount ordinarily charged.

If the hotels in Washington are overcharging visitors to the inauguration the facts should be ascertained and the practice exposed. Washington is the one city that belongs to all the people of our country and is the seat of the Government of all the people. And, therefore, Washington, of all places, should treat fairly the citizens who visit it. And to such hotels as may be charging exorbitant rates I should like to propound the question—Are you trying to keep the people who elected President Truman from seeing him inaugurated or shall we interpret your action as merely an invitation to the Congress to place hotel rates in Washington under rent control?

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table today, and any other special orders, I may be permitted to proceed for 40 minutes on the subject of air power in the 1950 budget.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

THE LATE HONORABLE ARTHUR D. HEALEY

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Speaker, it is with keen regret that I inform the House of the death of a former Member and my immediate predecessor from the Eighth Massachusetts District, Hon. Arthur D. Healey. He passed away on September 16, 1948, in Somerville, Mass., the city of his birth and in which he had always lived.

Judge Healey was born December 29, 1889. He attended the public schools, was a graduate of the Somerville Latin School, and attended Dartmouth College. He later graduated from the Boston University Law School with the degree of LL. B. and began the practice of law in Boston with his brother, Robert T. Healey, under the firm name of Healey & Healey. He served in the infantry in the First World War, rising to the rank of lieutenant.

Upon the retirement of Congressman Charles L. Underhill, Arthur Healey was elected to succeed him in the Seventy-third Congress. He was reelected to the Seventy-fourth, Seventy-fifth, Seventy-sixth, and Seventy-seventh Congresses. He served on the Committee on the Judiciary and later on the Committee on Ways and Means, and it was mainly due to his efforts on the Judiciary Committee that legislation recommended by President Roosevelt and the Department of Justice was drafted into law to meet the crime wave then challenging the Government. Together with the late Senator David I. Walsh, he was one of the authors of the Walsh-Healey Act setting up fair labor standards for all Government contracts. He served also as a member of the Dies Committee on Un-American Activities, and although much interested in the work of that committee he was a frequent critic of the methods of the committee in the conduct of its hearings.

While serving in his fifth term as a Congressman he was appointed to the United States district court by the late President Roosevelt. As a judge on the Federal bench he exhibited the same capacity for industry and devotion to duty which characterized his earlier service in Congress. He was a kindly and sincere man possessed of the highest personal qualities and earned a reputation of being an able judge who was unfailingly just in his dealings with all who came before him.

He was married to Tresla Fisher, who survives him together with four children, Robert, Arthur Daniel, Jr., Elaine, and Ruth Mary. I know that I speak for all of his former colleagues in the House in expressing sympathy to his splendid family, who will take consolation from the fact that a devoted husband and father has bequeathed to them the priceless legacy of having crowded into 58 years of life so much of notable achievement as to make up a respected and honored career in the service of city, State, and Nation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODWIN. I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the death of Arthur Healey is indeed a very sad one to those of us who served with him and who knew him. It is particularly so to me because of the very close personal friendship that existed between us during a lifetime in professional life, as well as his service in this body and in his distinguished career as a United States district judge in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Arthur Healey was one of the most sincere and conscientious Members I have ever served with, a man devoted not only to his work in this body, but also to his work on the bench, a judicial position he occupied with great distinction for several years prior to his death. Every one of us who served with him will always remember his genial personality, as well as his serious and sincere character. He was really an outstanding Member of this body. He was the author of several bills so properly referred to by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GOODWIN], bills which benefited the average person in this country, bills which made great contributions to the progress of our country.

In a sense it may be said that he died in line of duty. I remember that about a year and a half or 2 years prior to his death he suffered a shock. His condition remained serious for some time, but being of a determined spirit he went back to his judicial duties as quickly as he could, and labored in the performance of his work. I am satisfied that his devotion to the duties of his office aggravated his condition and precipitated his death. The entire Massachusetts delegation, and I particularly as a member thereof, join the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GOODWIN] in expressing to Mrs. Healey and her fine family our profound sympathy in their bereavement.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODWIN. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. It is indeed distressing to learn of the demise of Arthur Healey. I served with him over many a stormy period in this House. He was a distinguished Member of this body and later became a most exemplary jurist. He was beloved by all who came in contact with him. He was able, selfless, intelligent, hard-working. Well might we say with the prophet Micah that he did justice, he loved mercy, and he walked humbly before his God. Our condolences go to his widow and dear ones.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODWIN. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. I wish to add to what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], and the gentleman from Massachusetts who just yielded to me, had to say about Judge Arthur Healey. When Judge Healey first came to the Seventy-third Congress he served a portion of the district I now have the honor of representing. I know that the people of Somerville and the surrounding areas all held him in the same high regard when he was first a Congressman as they did later when he served them as judge. I know I reflect the feelings of all the people in my district in expressing my regrets at the untimely passing of Judge Healey. His progressive and humanitarian service in the Congress of the United States has been indelibly imprinted on the Nation's statute books, in the many laws, such as the Walsh-Healey Act, which bear his name as author or coauthor.

In his role as judge, he upheld to the fullest the standards of humaneness, fairness, and justice.

Arthur Healey was indeed the ideal public servant.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODWIN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. I served here in this body with Arthur Healey, and it delights me to be able to testify to the high standing and to the high favor in which he was regarded by his associates. He was a man of extraordinary ability, always faithful and devoted in the discharge of the duties that devolved upon him as a public servant.

I regarded him very highly, as did all of my associates who come from the section of the country that I represent. He was a good citizen, he was a fine man, he was a man of profound convictions, deep faith, and he contributed much to the solution of the problems with which the country was afflicted at that time.

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and also that any Members who desire may extend their remarks on the late Judge Healey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore granted, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

Mr. STEFAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

THE VOLUNTARY ALLOCATION PROGRAM

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a bill to continue the authority of the President with respect to the making of voluntary agreements for the allocation of scarce materials.

This authority was given the President by the Eightieth Congress, but expires on March 1, 1949.

It is my judgment that the allocation of scarce materials by voluntary agreements has been a good thing. In a peacetime economy, it is the proper approach to such a problem. It provides for the Government to assist business in an advisory and helpful manner, rather than swinging a big club to require conformity with rigid, incentive-stifling red tape.

As late as July 1, 1948, the President wrote Secretary Sawyer, stating that he did not consider it appropriate to invoke the mandatory authority over steel, and requested the development of voluntary programs for the armed forces requirements.

With production rising in all lines of manufacturing, it would seem even more true today that the voluntary method is still appropriate. That in spite of the idea of price control, rationing, and mandatory allocations presented by the Fair Deal, we should insist that this program be given an opportunity to succeed. It is important that the Congress act at once on this measure. The termination date of the present law—March 1, 1949—has caused a lag in the program. The industrial processes involved must be planned on the basis of a fairly long period, and the uncertain future of the law has made negotiations difficult. I hope this bill will receive early and favorable consideration by the Congress.

STEEL OPERATIONS EXPECTED TO SET RECORD

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD on steel operations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, the country's steel industry this week expects to achieve the greatest weekly production in history, the American Iron and Steel Institute announced on January 10, 1949. The output is expected to reach 1,830,600 net tons of ingots and steel for castings, surpassing by 26,300 tons the previous weekly record established in the week of November 29, 1948.

The anticipated production for the current week compares with 1,802,500 tons last week and a month ago, and with 1,723,200 tons in the week of January 12, 1948.

The industry's operating rate this week is computed on the revised capacity of 96,120,930 tons annually. Based on this new estimate, the rate will be 99.3 percent, compared with the revised figure of 97.8 percent last week, with 100 percent a month ago and 95.6 percent a year ago on the former, lower capacity. The 1948 capacity was 94,233,460 tons annually.

In 1948, 88,509,033 tons were actually produced. Average annual output was 93.9 percent of potential capacity. The best year so far was 1944, when the wartime peak of 89,600,000 tons was produced.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WILSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on January 7, I was given permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an address by Admiral Holloway. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $195.25, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

CONGRESSIONAL SECRETARIES CLUB

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, on next Monday night, January 17, the Congressional Secretaries Club, which is composed of our office staffs, is presenting their first program of the year at the Department of Commerce auditorium. The program is in the nature of a welcome to incoming secretaries, Members of Congress and their families.

Beginning promptly at 8 o'clock, the program will feature an address by the Honorable W. Stuart Symington, Secretary of the Air Force, and the Air Force symphony orchestra and glee club. Films depicting the operation of the Berlin air lift will also be presented. The subject of Mr. Symington's talk will be The New Department of the Air Force.

This event will be of special interest to all new Members of this House. I wish that every Member could see the Berlin lift in operation—short of that—I wish all could see this picture.

It is truly a stupendous spectacle.

There will be a gala musical event featuring the 90-piece Air Force Band, which will close the evening's meeting.

In behalf of the Congressional Secretaries Club, of which my able secretary, Merrill Winslett, is president, I invite all Members of the Senate and of the House, their wives and families to enjoy with our office staffs the talk of our Secretary of the United States Air Force—to see the great picture of the Berlin lift and close the evening by enjoying a splendid musical treat given by the Air Force Band, acknowledgedly one of America's greatest symphony bands.

As you know, the Congressional Secretaries Club, established many years ago, is an organization made up of the secretaries and other employees in the offices of the Members of both Houses of Congress. The objective of the organization is to assemble and disseminate information with respect to governmental departments, agency procedures, policies and all other factual information which might be helpful in the operation of their offices and the discharge of their duties to their respective Representatives and Senators.

The purpose of the Congressional Secretaries Club is primarily educational. During the first 2 months of each new session a series of lectures is given by the veteran members of the club. These lectures are followed by discussion period in order to afford all new secretaries and others in their staffs an opportunity of informing themselves how best to make departmental and other facilities available to their use. Discussions cover all manner of subjects with respect to correspondence, the dissemination of literature, booklets, and other items which make for the most efficient operation of their congressional offices.

The club meetings have long been patronized by members of the President's Cabinet and other top-flight departmental executives and diplomatic officials who intimately discuss, not alone the objectives of their several departments, but ways and means of developing closer cooperation between the legislative offices here on Capitol Hill and all governmental activities.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WEICHEL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement made by a prominent San Francisco attorney on socialized medicine.

Mr. SCRIVNER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a definition of success.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in four instances, one with regard to a bill he is introducing, and in two instances to include extraneous material.

Mr. COLE of New York (at the request of Mr. KEATING) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous material.

Mr. CANFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Representative HERTER which appeared in the January issue of Nation's Business and is captioned "Everybody is for it, but."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered at the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the first national forest in the Black Hills.

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. DONDERO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short item.

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article on the water problems of California.

Mr. FELLOWS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by the former Governor of Maine to the National Convention of Grangers.

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, following any special orders heretofore granted, I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

PEACE IN THE MIDDLE EAST

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I join with a distinguished member of Britain's House of Commons in concern over the consequences of the British Government's Palestine policy, and urge the British people not to be "Bevinized" in the current British-Israeli crisis. In other words, not to let hurt feelings over loss of the Palestine mandate, and attendant trying events, prevail over the best interests of Great Britain and the world in attaining a secure and peaceful Middle East.

Anthony Eden, in a speech yesterday, asked why the RAF carried out reconnaissance over an Israeli-Egyptian battle area, and what useful purpose it could serve. I am asking the same and other questions of our State Department in a resolution of inquiry which I am introducing, not intended, in any sense, as critical of our State Department, which has kept to an even-handed course in this crisis, but only intended to adduce for all our people a clear exposition of the facts.

There have been a number of truce resolutions by the United Nations Security Council since July of this year, and regardless of conflicting claims on violation of the truces, it is a fact that Israel and Egypt had already agreed to sit down with the United Nations mediator to negotiate an armistice, when British air forces appeared over an Israeli-Egyptian battle area and brought on the latest crisis. In this way the British Government by its action gave the impression of putting itself athwart the hopes for peace. Let us hope that Egypt and Israel will proceed, nonetheless, to consummate their armistice and to seek to attain a general peace in the Middle East.

BEVIN'S PETULANCE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Ernest Bevin's actions toward Israel are wicked, and President Truman deserves praise for his refusal to countenance Bevin's blustering and bellicose posturing. Even Anthony Eden has condemned Bevin and has indicated that the British had no right to be over the battle area in Palestine. One of the pilots who bailed out admitted that he was over Israeli territory. Bevin offers the excuse that they are giving aid under the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty. But Egypt has repudiated this document and has asked the United Nations to have it abrogated. Despite solemn warning by President Truman, Bevin is employing British armed might in the Mediterranean at Aqaba and Cyprus, which undoubtedly jeopardizes peace negotiations between Israel and Egypt.

There can be no hope of achieving stability in the Middle East with the continuance of Mr. Bevin's personal war against Israel. Achieving stability there is a matter of vital concern to the United States.

THE PLIGHT OF INVESTMENT CAPITAL

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks and include an article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, in the midst of all the arguments that have been taking place with respect to the President's budget, it is indeed refreshing to read an article which appeared in the Washington Daily News of Wednesday, written by Eleanor Roosevelt, entitled "Investment Capital Is Getting Harder and Harder to Find."

I commend this article to the attention of my friends on the right, and to my colleagues on the left, as a statement emanating from one of our great leaders in America, indicating the problems that lie ahead when we consider the legislative program submitted by the President.

The article is as follows:

INVESTMENT CAPITAL IS GETTING HARDER AND HARDER TO FIND

(By Eleanor Roosevelt)

Tuesday.—One of the leading newspapers points out that among President Truman's economic advisers there seems to be less concern about the financial return to those who have capital to invest and who live on the income derived from that investment than there is consideration of the proper level of farm prices and the proper return to labor.

This always has been one of the most delicate balances that anyone guiding the financial interests of the country has had to make.

It is essential to a high level of employment that it be profitable for capital to be invested not just in safe enterprise but in new and untried enterprises.

There must be incentive for this, particularly in times of peace. In times of war, when many men are risking their lives at the battle fronts, many others are willing to risk their money to do whatever is necessary for the well-being of the country. However, in times of peace there is not the same patriotic motive with which to prod capital into productive enterprise and, therefore, incentives must be found.

Some of our biggest investors—such as trust companies, banks, and insurance companies—are limited by law in their investments in order to safeguard those whose money they are using. Therefore, if we expect to develop new enterprises, to employ more people and to have more buying power, there must always be available capital from the individual investors. This is getting harder and harder to find today.

It is of vital interest, of course, to the farmer and the wage earner that the things they have to buy keep on increasing in cost, because even though wages go up and farm prices go up they never seem quite to cover the increased cost of living brought about by inflation and the passing on to the public of whatever costs have been imposed on the manufacturer.

Therefore, it is going to be necessary, it seems to me, to examine everything not only with an eye to what we would like to do, but with the constant thought before us of what the essentials are that must be done.

The preservation of the credit of our Government is of vital importance to us and to the world as a whole, and while I believe there are many things in our program, as outlined by the President, that are essential and will help to bring us prosperity, I think even the best of them should be weighed with the viewpoint of their essentiality in attaining the objectives that we have before us. These objectives are rehabilitation in the world at large and stability and strength in our own economic system at home.

These ends should never be forgotten and their importance should be explained to the people as each step is taken in this carefully balanced program which alone will see us through the difficulties of the next few years.

INCREASING SALARIES OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my remarks principally to the majority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK]. He has always been fair with me and I want to be fair with him, in this respect, because I understand they are going to bring a bill in here asking that unanimous consent be given to increase the salaries of Government officials.

I think we should increase the President's salary if it is necessary, but I think that we are doing wrong when we bring in a bill asking for $50,000 on top of a $40,000 expense account, making $90,000, as part of salary with no accounting. The President is now advocating the greatest expenditure of Government funds. He is not advocating a balanced budget. His budget for spending is $873,000,000 more than our income for 1950.

I think the President of the United States should pay taxes the same as everybody else in the country, especially when he is asking for a budget that is $873,000,000 out of balance. He should feel the pinch of taxes just the same as everybody else. I want the majority leader to know that I am not going to let that bill come up by unanimous consent. I give him that notice now so that he can prepare some way to get the legislation in here, if he wants it to pass. I say give the President a $200,000 salary, if that is what he needs, but do not grant a $50,000 expense account plus the $40,000 expense account he now gets. It does not make sense. No wonder he is so anxious to spend other people's money, no wonder he wants to tax everybody else. Let him have some of his own medicine, in the form of taxes. Suppose a president of a corporation recommended the great spending of corporate funds, much more than the corporation takes in, do you think the stockholders would permit it? If they did not arrange for a balanced budget sometime they would go into bankruptcy. The stockholders would not elect a board of directors that would have such a president. The stockholders would clean house with such a board of directors. Therefore, I feel it my duty to stop the Congress from doing the same thing to our President of the United States, from spending, spending, spending. I feel it my duty to stop it if I can, and I will always do my duty to my constituents, God being my helper.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUBER]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. HUBER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by David Lawrence and in another instance to include another article.

FOREIGN SERVICE RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY SYSTEM—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—(H. DOC. NO. 39)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the Unted States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Acting Secretary of State, showing all receipts and disbursements on account of refunds, allowances, and annuities for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1948, in connection with the Foreign Service retirement and disability system as required by section 862, Foreign Service Act of 1946 (Public Law 724).

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 13, 1949.

(Enclosure: Report concerning retirement and disability fund, Foreign Service.)

FIRST ANNUAL REPORT OF PHILIPPINE ALIEN PROPERTY ADMINISTRATION

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read by the Clerk and, together with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the First Annual Report for the Philippine Alien Property Administration for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1947.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 13, 1949.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the ground upon which he seeks recognition on a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, before dawn on the morning of December 1, 1948, at the factory of the Shakespeare Co., located at Kalamazoo, Mich., where a picket line was being maintained by local 3619, USA–CIO, there was violence.

The Representative of the Fourth Congressional District of Michigan, a member of the House Committee on Education and Labor, was authorized and directed by the chairman of the committee, the Honorable Fred A. Hartley, Jr., to proceed to Kalamazoo and to hold hearings to ascertain, among other things, whether the so-called Taft-Hartley Act was adequate, was being enforced, or whether the act should be amended.

The Member so designated proceeded to Kalamazoo, held hearings there on the 4th and 6th. Thereafter, and on the 14th day of December 1948, the Kalamazoo Gazette, a newspaper published at Kalamazoo and circulated in the Fourth Congressional District of Michigan, the southwestern part of Michigan, and the northern part of Indiana, on the front page published a picture of the Honorable JOHN LESINSKI, Member of Congress from the Sixteenth District of Michigan, and under the picture were the words: "Representative JOHN LESINSKI ponders riot probe. Then followed a news story captioned, "HOFFMAN's quiz lashed by LESINSKI—Next House labor chairman speaks here."

> Representative JOHN LESINSKI, ranking Democratic member of the House Labor Committee and slated to become its next chairman, last night lashed out at Representative CLARE HOFFMAN's investigation of the December 1 mob attack on the Shakespeare plants and said he may conduct his own congressional investigation.
> He declared that HOFFMAN had "no more authority than a rabbit" in conducting the recent investigation.

Further along in that news story are these words in bold-faced type: "Slaps at HOFFMAN." Those words were followed by the statement: "Representative LESINSKI called Representative HOFFMAN 'a pimp of Joe Stalin.'"

That statement, published in the Kalamazoo Gazette, reflects upon the integrity, the patriotism, in his official capacity as Representative of the Fourth Congressional District of Michigan. It tends to subject him to ridicule and contempt. It charges that he, acting in his Representative capacity and as a member of a standing committee of the House, was guilty of unpatriotic, disloyal conduct.

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes the gentleman from Michigan has stated grounds for addressing the House on a question of personal privilege. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, this is a most unpleasant situation. It is one which I would like to avoid. But there should be, there must be, a limit to what can be printed and said about a Member of Congress.

This incident reflects upon the integrity of the House. It is a charge that there is in the House of Representatives an agent of a foreign government, a government commonly known as a potential enemy, a government with which we are waging a cold war; a Member the House permits to act as an agent of one of its committees.

It is a situation which calls for plain-speaking, the use of simple, understandable words.

It is a charge which, so far as it involves me personally, I will take care of at the proper time, in the proper way, before the proper tribunal. But because it is something more than a personal matter and because, as stated, it reflects upon the integrity of the House itself, this time is being used to warn the Members of Congress, and especially those who are serving a first term, of what they may expect if they oppose certain groups, politically powerful.

Members of the House have on occasion—and rightly—expressed a great deal of sympathy and indignation for individuals in the executive branch of the Government, who, it was charged, were smeared by a congressional committee. Have they any rebuke for those who in this instance seek to smear one of their colleagues?

Perhaps the greatest safeguard protecting the liberty of the people, the welfare of the Nation, is a free press, the right to speak freely.

The greatest danger to the citizen's liberty and the security of the Nation is false propaganda, designed to undermine the confidence of the people in their chosen representatives, in their existing form of government.

Notwithstanding the fact that we in this country have more of everything that contributes to prosperity, freedom and happiness, too many of us are inclined to listen to and follow the words and thoughts of those of and from other lands, where the people have less of everything that is desirable.

Communists seeking to destroy us find propaganda one of their most available and effective weapons.

For so long have radio commentators, editors, propagandists, unfairly criticized the Congress of the United States and its individual Members, that many newspapers, not realizing the effect upon Members of Congress of the unjustifiable and often untrue statements reflecting upon their ability, their sincerity, and their loyalty, have perhaps inadvertently given publicity to propaganda which was designed to, which does, shake the confidence of the people in their chosen representatives and in the Congress as a whole.

Elected to the Eighty-first Congress are 94 Members of the House who are now serving their first term. Twenty-two Members who formerly served in the House were elected in November.

It is to give to my colleagues who are serving their first term some warning of what they may expect from some critics that this time is taken.

A week ago today, the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the laws of two States, the constitution of another State, which protected the right of the individual who did not belong to a labor organization to earn his livelihood in the sweat of his face, were within the power of the States to enact, the right of the people to adopt.

The fact that it became necessary for the Supreme Court to render such a decision is most astounding. From the beginning of human existence, every individual who stopped to think knew that, if man would eat, wear, clothing, be protected from the elements, he must work.

But the decision was necessary, for, in this country, there has grown up in the last few years the theory that, to exercise his right to work, the individual must join, pay the initiation fees, dues, and special assessments prescribed by organizations which have no authority to limit a man's right to work, but which have been successful in doing just that.

Because, for more than 13 years, I have opposed that theory, fought for the right of a man to work when and where he wished, attempts have repeatedly been made to coerce and intimidate me, to force me to cast my vote here in the House in favor of or against certain bills. The alternative offered was political execution.

Because those attempts, the methods employed, and the procedure followed by certain politically powerful organizations in a campaign against me run parallel to those employed by the same organizations to deprive a man of his right to work, which the laws of some States and the constitution of one State recently outlawed, it is my purpose to point out to my colleagues some of the things they may expect if they vote contrary to the orders of the CIO.

The nonunion man, sometimes the union employee, who wishes to work in a struck factory, is oftentimes by massed pickets barred from his place of employment. If he attempts to force his way through a picket line, he is pushed and shoved, and sometimes beaten.

If it appears that the picket line is unable to keep men from work, then often in comes the goon squad.

What is a goon squad? Usually it is a gang numbering anywhere from 25 or 50 to one or several hundred big, able-bodied individuals, some of them apparently professional bruisers. They come sometimes from other factories, sometimes from other communities and cities, sometimes from other States. Sometimes they travel a hundred miles or more. For example, in the sit-down strikes in Michigan in 1937, some came in from Atlanta, Ga. In the Galion strikes in Ohio, some came from Buffalo, N. Y.

When they arrive on the scene the officers are defied, court orders are ignored, property is destroyed, and individuals are beaten.

Those are the methods employed to prevent a man from working, to deprive a man of an available job.

Now, how do these same organizations get at a Congressman? They do not beat him physically. Is it just possible that they are afraid of public opinion? Is it possible that they think he might be armed and oppose force with force? The goons seldom act except in a cowardly manner, when they have overwhelming force available.

No, they do not physically beat up a Congressman. They assail his reputation. They attempt to smear him. They lie about him. They vilify him. They try to humiliate him and the members of his family.

Sometimes they go into his district, as on one occasion they came into mine and put out two pamphlets with cartoons containing many false charges.

Some of their agents and sympathizers falsely assail him over the radio, in public meetings which are reported, as in the case to which I am now referring, in the daily press.

When picket lines are unable to stop returning workers at the factory gates, on occasion their sympathizers go to the worker's home, throw bricks through his windows, call his wife or members of his family over the phone and threaten them with bodily injury, sometimes with death.

The character assassins of the CIO likewise seek to reach a man through his family. They give utterance to and cause to be printed charges which bring grief, shame, and humiliation to his wife, to his children—yes, and in some cases, to his grandchildren.

And that was the method that was employed at Kalamazoo. Permit me to tell you something about that situation.

On September 7, 1948, local No. 3619, United Steelworkers of America, CIO, of Kalamazoo, Mich., called a strike against Shakespeare Co. and Shakespeare Products Co., two corporations engaged in manufacturing fishing tackle and automobile accessories. A picket line was established. The dispute ran along in what might be described as the customary manner from the 7th day of September until the 1st day of December.

A back-to-work movement had made such progress that, on November 30, out of a possible 778 employees, 535 were working.

During the strike, the local union had been advised and "serviced" by at least three representatives of the United Steelworkers of America, CIO, namely, Clarence (Jerry) Jackson, Thomas Shane, and Glen S. Sigman.

Before daylight on the morning of December 1, between 30 and 40 cars with license plates from counties on the eastern side of the State, more than 150 miles away, carrying between two and three hundred physically well-developed, well-dressed men, many of whom wore CIO buttons, parked before the plant entrance.

Those in the cars got out. They acted with military precision. Some of them threw missiles through windows, through the glass in the doors. Some overturned the cars of working employees; burned a truck; forced their way into the plant and there assaulted and beat both women and men.

Mrs. Judy Smalley, who lives in North Bloomingdale in Michigan, in the Fourth Congressional District, 25 years of age, punched in at the time clock at 6:25 a. m. She was sitting on a bench by the time clock, waiting to begin work, when she saw a man coming into the factory. Suddenly she heard cries of "Let's get busy." Men approached and one of them grabbed her by the hair, pushed her head back, and then another man, who had gloves on, according to her sworn testimony, slapped her on the face, first on one side and then on the other, while another man was holding her head back.

She said:

> The one in the blue jacket slapped me. I saw these little white buttons they have—they had little white CIO buttons on. * * * You just cannot believe, sir, that men come in and hit women.

At this point, let me state that Mr. Glace, the president of that local, and Mr. Betz, the recording secretary, were both sitting in this young woman's presence as she told her story under oath. They both, upon being asked, stated emphatically that they did not approve of that kind of conduct.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] is present and heard the statement propounded by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] to the Speaker. If the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] used the language that is charged, he transgressed the rules of this House. I am sure he recognizes that to be so, and I am likewise sure that he is big enough to ask unanimous consent of this House to permit him to retract the statement made.

I wonder if the gentleman who now has the floor would not yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] to propound a unanimous-consent request. If granted, and the gentleman should make retraction, that would end the controversy which has now arisen.

Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I will answer that in due time.

I may ask the gentleman from Georgia when he speaks about a retraction, how can a man retract a statement made before more than a thousand people in the city of Kalamazoo in the locality adjoining my home, only 23 miles from my home? I will give him an opportunity later on, but I want the House to know of this situation because, these 94 new Members who have come in here are entitled to know what may happen if they oppose certain political action groups whether they will have protection from the kind of conduct charges such as are set forth in this publication.

Mrs. Smalley continued her story:

> Well, he slapped me. He caught me in the eye—you probably cannot see it—and in my mouth there was a little sore. * * * I thought that my heart would never beat again, and I got up and ran. * * * I ran and screamed. * * * I crawled under a machine and stayed there—so that I could hide. I did not want to get hit any more; I was so scared. * * * Then somebody found me and I went upstairs * * * and the doctor came and they took me in the ambulance * * * and they were taking employees out in the ambulance. * * * There was quite a mob down there and they stood there and they beat on the windows of the ambulance and said, "I hope you die; I hope you die."

Edwin Starrett, an employee, was working in the plant when the goons arrived. They beat and kicked him, though he had dropped to the ground to escape injury and pretended that he was unconscious. Finally, one of the goons said, "That's enough, fellows. Let's go."

Although this raid was in support of the picket line being maintained by local 3619, USA-CIO, at least two of its officers expressed their disapproval. The raid was carried out principally by those who came in cars from the vicinity of Detroit, who drove around 150 miles to stage their rioting.

What has all this to do with the false, slanderous, and libelous charges made against me? I will tell you.

The then chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor had, in writing, instructed me to go to Kalamazoo and hold hearings. Hearings were held on the 4th, 6th, and 17th of December 1937. From that sworn testimony, which was reprinted to some extent in the local press, the people of Kalamazoo learned of the lawlessness, the savagery, the viciousness, the cowardliness of this raid, and which turned public sentiment against the union.

Having through the raid lost much of its public support, the union decided to stage a public rally and mass meeting. On December 13 it ran an ad in the Kalamazoo Gazette and put out handbills which read as follows:

> Attend the public rally and mass meeting in support of Shakespeare strikers, Monday, December 13, 1948, 7:30 p. m., Lincoln High School, North Burdick Street, Kalamazoo, Mich.
> Speakers: Congressman JOHN LESINSKI, of Michigan, next chairman of the House Labor Committee; August Scholle, president, Michigan CIO Council and regional director of the State of Michigan; John Riffe, international representative, USA-CIO; Thomas Shane, director, district 29, USA-CIO, who will discuss Judge McDonald's proposal.
> Everybody welcome. Follow the crowd.

Tuesday evening, over station WGFG, Kalamazoo, Ray Pasnick, speaking officially for the United Steelworkers, said:

> A high point in the fight of the United Steelworkers at the Shakespeare plant was reached last night at a public indignation meeting held in the Lincoln High School auditorium and attended by more than 1,000 Kalamazoo citizens from all walks of life.
> It was a meeting that will long be remembered. Congressman JOHN LESINSKI, of Michigan's Sixteenth District, the principal speaker, brought the house down with a wild and thunderous ovation when he promised that a full-dress investigation into all aspects of the Shakespeare strike would be conducted by Congress.
> Congressman LESINSKI is slated to become the new chairman of the House Labor and Education Committee in the Eighty-first Congress and spoke last night with authority, although not officially.

It was a tense and expectant audience that waited for the Congressman to be introduced and I can assure you they were not disappointed. From the moment he began to speak until he concluded his address, the citizens of Kalamazoo saw a fighting, militant representative of the people in action.

The Congressman opened his remarks by saying he had listened carefully to previous speakers describe the struggle endured by Shakespeare workers in their fight for a new working agreement. "As I sat there," he said, "I wondered whether I was in Hitler Germany or Soviet Russia." He indicated that only under either of the dictatorship governments could the same thing happen. And then, amdist the rousing cheers and overwhelming applause of those present, he said, "I am going to find out just what is happening here."

Congressman LESINSKI had nothing but scorn for the 2-day inquisition into the Shakespeare strike conducted by Republican Congressman HOFFMAN here a week ago. He charged HOFFMAN with proceeding with the so-called investigation without authority. "I can assure you," Congressman LESINSKI added, "that CLARE HOFFMAN did not consult with any of the Democratic Party members on the House Labor and Education Committee before coming to Kalamazoo and giving this company aid and comfort."

He then went on to say that in the interest of justice and fair play, a new and impartial investigation was absolutely necessary.

* * * * *

While there was little doubt in anyone's mind last night that Congressman LESINSKI stole the show at the meeting, several other important speakers made vital contributions to the cause of the strike.

It might be added that, although the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] lives in Dearborn, which is in Wayne County—you will remember that some 27 of the goon-squad cars carried license plates issued to individuals residing in that vicinity—and although notice of the hearings of the Labor Subcommittee was carried in Detroit and other papers, and although the hearings were held on the 4th, the 6th, and the 17th of December and the union rally was not held until the 13th, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] never availed himself of the opportunity to protest a one-man hearing. He knew that similar meetings had been held in other cases.

If he knew of the organization of his own committee, he would have known that on the 27th day of January 1947 the chairman of the committee was authorized, by unanimous vote, to do just what he did in this particular case.

But the radio script does not carry all that was said at this rally on the 13th of December, sponsored by the CIO. Nor does it carry all that the Kalamazoo Gazette charges was said and which the Kalamazoo Gazette reprinted.

At that meeting, where the radio commentator for the Steelworkers said the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] brought down the house and was greeted with a wild and thunderous ovation, the Kalamazoo Gazette said that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] said "Representative HOFFMAN is a pimp of Joe Stalin."

What is a pimp? A pimp is a pander, a procurer. To the average individual it means a procurer, a solicitor, of business for a house of prostitution.

Sworn statements from individuals present at the meeting allege that the words above quoted were followed by the words, "a prostitute."

Inasmuch as, being a man, I cannot be a prostitute, and inasmuch as there has never been the slightest intimation or any evidence that I was a pander, the only logical conclusion that can be drawn is that the words as here used mean, and were intended to mean, that I was a despicable servant or agent of Joe Stalin.

But the Kalamazoo Gazette said that "Representative LESINSKI called Representative HOFFMAN 'a pimp of Joe Stalin.'"

If the gentleman from the Sixteenth District of Michigan made that statement, what did he mean?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me now?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Briefly.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman having the floor now yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI], if he wishes to be recognized?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. If he wants to tell me, first, did he say that I was a pimp? I will yield to him.

Mr. COX. I am not endeavoring to embarrass anybody. I am trying to end an unhappy sort of a controversy over a matter which can be remedied by a simple statement of apology or retraction by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman from the Sixteenth District of Michigan has never asked to be recognized, and he never denied that he made the statement. He never said, if he made it, that it was untrue.

Who is Joe Stalin? He is the head of the U. S. S. R., a nation commonly known as communistic.

We affirm "In God we trust." We open every session of the House with prayer. When this Congress convened, every Member bowed his head and joined in reciting the Lord's prayer. And we are not hypocrites.

What do the Communists advocate? The Communists do not believe in God. They seek the destruction of our Government by force.

The only meaning to be drawn from the charge against the Member from the fourth district of Michigan, as printed in the Kalamazoo Gazette, is that he is the agent of a government which advocates the overthrow of our Government by force. In short, a charge that he is guilty of disloyalty and treason.

It is a charge which is false. It is a charge which every Member of this House who has served here during the past 10 years knows to be false.

Does this House propose to let such a charge against a Member go unrebuked?

I challenge this House to call before it those responsible for that charge in the Kalamazoo Gazette; to have the writer of that charge, as printed in the Kalamazoo Gazette, under oath disclose the source of his information.

I challenge the House to then call before the bar of the House or before a committee of the House the gentleman who originally made the charge, if it was made; call upon him to substantiate the charge or to appear in the well of the House, withdraw his charge and accept whatever censure, if any, the Speaker may care to impose.

If there develops the slightest evidence that the Representative from the Fourth Michigan Congressional District has ever been or has ever acted as an agent of Joe Stalin, then he should be expelled from this House.

But let me proceed.

Why was I called a pimp of Joe Stalin? Was it because there is anything in my record that would lead anyone to believe that there was any truth whatever in that charge? No, there is not.

Then why was the charge made? Was it made because the Communists, because certain racketeers and ambitious politicians in certain labor organizations, by intimidation, by unjustifiable and despicable false charges against me, are trying to force me to refrain from exposing some of their activities?

Is it an attempt to shut the mouth, still the voice, silence the opposition, of a Member of Congress to certain union politicians?

They are trying to do to me what some try to do to the nonunion worker.

For 13 years, 11 months, and 347 days prior to the 13th day of December, the Member from the Fourth Congressional District served in this Congress.

He was assigned to serve on the Committee on Labor on January 12, 1940. For more than 8 years, at the meetings of that committee, he sat across the table in the committee room from the gentleman from the Sixteenth District of Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI]. Never once in all that time was there any personal controversy, although we differed in our views as to what was best for organized labor.

Did the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] make the statement attributed to him by the Kalamazoo Gazette?

When those responsible for the publication in the Gazette were told that they would be called to account for that publication, they told me they would justify it by showing that the paper did not originate the statement, that in truth and in fact it was made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI].

Did he make it? On the 29th day of December, by registered letter, postage fully prepaid, two letters were mailed to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI], calling his attention to the publication in the Kalamazoo Gazette. One letter went to him at his office address in Dearborn, Mich.; the other to his home address in Dearborn. In neither case was a registered mail receipt card received by me until the 11th day of January last, when two cards came back showing the following:

RETURN RECEIPT

Received from the postmaster the registered or insured article, the original number of which appears on the face of this card.

1. JOHN LESINSKI.
(Signature or name of addressee)
2. E. Corbett.
(Signature of addressee's agent. Agent should enter addressee's name on line one above.)

Date of delivery: January 10, 1949.

The second card and receipt was the same except as to number.

Friday last, Mr. LESINSKI was personally advised of the mailing of these letters and there was delivered to his secretary—and he was present in his office—a copy of that same letter. No reply from him has been received. Saturday last, his office was notified that I would speak from the well of the House on this matter. Last Monday I spoke to him personally—asked him about my letter, he said he had it. I told him I would comment on the situation from the well of the House today. He is here to make such answer as he is advised may be proper.

So to what does it boil down? What do the facts show?

The facts in this case show that, if a Member of Congress attempts to protect the right to work, even though he does it in a fair manner—and there is no justifiable charge in this case that in the hearings there was anything unfair—he may expect that the CIO will, in some way, sponsor dirty, nasty, vicious, false charges to be made against him.

The individual worker, seeking to go through a picket line is called a scab, vile and indecent names; sworn at; sometimes beaten; his family threatened; his wife and children frightened. The Congressman, protesting a commando goon-squad raid, is called, so it is charged in the Kalamazoo Gazette, "a pimp of Joe Stalin" by one of his colleagues.

Here, when a Member of Congress over the years ventures to express opposition to the racketeering of some union officers—and in the Philadelphia Dock Street case, after our committee had exposed their activities, three of the officers of a union were tried for racketeering, were convicted of a violation of the Hobbs Antiracketeering Act—if he speaks against the goon-squad method employed by a union whose officers have refused to sign anti-Communist affidavits, he is the victim of a campaign of vilification. A newspaper circulating in his home town and district says he is called a pimp of Joe Stalin.

He is subject to abuse and vilification.

Why do I say that? I know. I have taken it ever since, in 1937, I condemned the sit-down strikes and the lawlessness of, and the Communists in, the CIO.

But who would have dreamed that a Member of Congress would be assailed by one of his colleagues with the charge that he was—and I quote—"a pimp of Joe Stalin," and, I might add, according to sworn affidavits in my possession, that was not all that was said by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI]. The affidavits alleged that he said, and I quote, "Hitler couldn't do any worse than HOFFMAN. HOFFMAN is a pimp of Joe Stalin—a prostitute."

How much time do I have, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 33 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am going to offer a resolution to bring this matter to a head. If the gentleman from the Sixteenth District of Michigan wants 10 minutes of my time, he is welcome to it. I assume that he can get it anyway. I have no objection to any man having the floor to answer the proposition that I have made.

But I want to repeat. Outsiders smear the House as a whole. They vilify and falsely accuse Members of the House. I want to know and I am challenging the House to say what they are going to do in a case like this. The resolution I offer is for the appointment of a committee of three to ascertain what? First, whether the Kalamazoo Gazette is correct and accurate when it said that the gentleman from Michigan from the Sixteenth District made that statement.

Then to ask the gentleman from Michigan, from the Sixteenth District, to offer evidence on his oath and substantiate his charge if he can. If he can make it stick and if the House can find where I am guilty, then I should be expelled at once. If the charge is not substantiated, then for the good of the Congress, the gentleman from Michigan should appear before the bar of the House and be told by the Speaker what is and what is not proper conduct for a Congressman.

Mr. Speaker, I send a resolution to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read.

Mr. McCORMACK. Just a moment. If the gentleman will yield, with reference to this resolution, the gentleman has not consulted the leadership on the Democratic side, has he, in relation to any intention to introduce a resolution today?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That is right. Do you want to know why?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, the gentleman does not have to tell me why.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. But I will be glad to.

Mr. McCORMACK. But I would be glad to hear why if the gentleman wants to tell us.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Ordinarily, if it were an ordinary resolution, of course I would consult the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] who in all the years that I have served here has been eminently fair. But, unless I am mistaken, and the precedents that I can cite do not bear me out, this is a privileged resolution.

Mr. McCORMACK. This is with reference to something that took place outside of the House of Representatives?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Yes. But I can cite, if the gentleman wishes, authorities where the same course has been followed.

Mr. McCORMACK. What the gentleman is doing then is with reference to alleged remarks carried in a newspaper—whether or not they are correct, I do not know because I know nothing about them—but they were made outside of the House during a campaign?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. No, no, there was no campaign.

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, they were outside of the House. That is immaterial. They were not made in the House by one Member against another. But the gentleman is trying to make those remarks a basis for action in this body?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I am saying that those remarks raise not only a question of personal privilege——

Mr. McCORMACK. A question of personal privilege is one thing, but the question of action by the House of Representatives is another thing.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I trust the gentleman will permit me to continue?

Mr. McCORMACK. Surely.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. These remarks raise not only a question of personal privilege, but they also raise the question of privilege of the House which must be accompanied under the rule by resolution.

Section 661, page 275, of Cannon's Procedure in the House of Representatives quotes the rule and cites some of the authorities. If the gentleman wants me to postpone this matter of the introduction of a resolution, I am perfectly agreeable. I am always willing to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] wherever I can, and whenever it will promote harmony. I would just as soon postpone this matter of the resolution and bring it up on a subsequent day and have the Speaker of the House rule on the matter of whether it raises the question of privilege of the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not want my position misunderstood. The gentleman knows I have a very friendly feeling for him and I know he has for me. While we disagree on occasions, we respect one another. As majority leader, it being my position to do so, on this occasion I simply injected myself into this. This is none of my business, other than as majority leader. I am on the side lines when a couple of Members are having a fight. I do not believe in getting into those affairs, but when the gentleman offers a resolution, then it becomes a different proposition.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Nobody is asking anybody to get into a fight between two Members.

Mr. McCORMACK. No, no. I understand that.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The question I am raising has two aspects.

Mr. McCORMACK. I did not make that observation except from my own angle, to show for the record why I am injecting myself into this, because it is my duty as majority leader in connection with the gentleman's statement that he is offering a resolution. Under those circumstances, I hope the gentleman will not offer the resolution today, even if it is within the rules, because the gentleman has not given any notice to the leadership. Personally, my offhand opinion would be that remarks made outside—for instance, if some Member up in Massachusetts attacked me on the outside, I do not consider that I could offer a resolution making an attack upon me on the outside the subject of official action by the House.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman is absolutely right about that. There is no disagreement between us. As I understand it, the gentleman is on his feet because he questions the right to raise this matter as a point of privilege of the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is all.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I agree with you that if somebody said something outside, just as an individual, of a Member as an individual or even, though the authorities do not agree on this, as a Member of the House, well and good; no privilege of the House would arise.

But in this particular case, the gentleman from the Fourth District of Michigan had held public hearings there at Kalamazoo. This mass meeting where it is alleged the objectional remarks were made was called to protest the employer's attitude, which again was proper, but the speech made by the gentleman from the Sixteenth District of Michigan referred to the action of the Member from the Fourth District of Michigan as a member of the committee of this House acting as a subcommittee chairman under direction of the chairman of a standing committee of the House.

Now, I will withdraw this resolution and will ask unanimous consent at this time, Mr. Speaker, to revise and extend my remarks and include citation of certain authorities.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Let us have the facts in this case clear in our minds. There was a strike. There was a commando raid. There was a destruction of personal property and injury to real estate, a beating of defenseless citizens. It was carried on by individuals who invaded the city; who came from more than 150 miles away; who wore CIO buttons.

The press carried a stateme :t from an international representative of the CIO to the effect that it assumed responsibility for the raid.

The hearings were held on the 4th and the 6th of December 1943. Spokesmen for the CIO condemned the hearings as being unauthorized. The gentleman from the Sixteenth District of Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] charged—and he admits the statement—that the subcommittee chairman holding the hearings "had no more authority than a rabbit." He compared the procedure to that followed by Hitler.

The Kalamazoo Gazette quoted him as making the charge to which reference has heretofore been made.

When the gentleman from the Sixteenth District of Michigan spoke at the rally on the night of the 13th of December, he was speaking of and condemning, not the conduct of an individual, but the course followed by a subcommittee chairman who was acting under the written authorization of the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, who, by House Resolution 111 and by the action of his own committee on January 29, 1947, had been authorized to appoint subcommittees to do just what was done in this case.

The remarks to which complaint is here made referred to a Member of the House in his official capacity, who at the time was acting as an agent of the House, and who, according to the newspaper publication, was charged with treasonable conduct.

Permit me to quote from Hinds' Precedents:

Hinds' Precedents, 1907, volume 3:

SEC. 2653. A resolution directing an inquiry into alleged treasonable conduct on the part of a Member was admitted as a question of privilege. On December 19, 1865, Mr. John F. Farnsworth, of Illinois, as a question of privilege, submitted the following:

"Whereas it is alleged that Benjamin G. Harris, a Representative in this House from the Fifth District of the State of Maryland, was, in the month of May last, before a very respectable and intelligent court martial tried, and by said court convicted, upon charge and specifications, to wit: 'Violative of the sixth article of war,' by giving aid and comfort to the public enemy and inciting them to continue to make war against the United States, declaring his sympathy with the enemy and his opposition to the Government of the United States in its efforts to suppress the rebellion; and

"Whereas it was proved at such trial (as is alleged) that the said Harris expressed his regret that the assassination of President Lincoln came too late to be of any use to the rebels, and at the same time declared that Jeff. Davis was a great and good man, all of which acts on the part of said Harris are inconsistent with the oath which he has taken as a Member of this House; and

"Whereas the said court martial sentenced the said Harris (among other things) to be forever disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States, which sentence was approved by the President: Therefore

"Resolved, That the Committee of Elections be directed to inquire into the facts of the case and that they report the same to the House, together with such action as said committee shall recommend; and in making their investigations said committee to have power to send for persons and papers."

Mr. Charles A. Eldridge, of Wisconsin, raised the question of order that no question of privilege was involved.

The Speaker held that the question raised was a question of privilege, and of the very highest kind, since it involved the right of a Member to his seat.

The resolution was then agreed to, yeas 138, nays 21.

SEC. 2652. A charge that a Member had been holding intercourse with the foes of the Government was investigated as a question of privilege. On July 15, 1861, Mr. John F. Potter, of Wisconsin, offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire whether the Honorable Henry May, a Representative in Congress from the Fourth District of the State of Maryland, has not been found holding criminal intercourse and correspondence with persons in armed rebellion against the Government of the United States, and to make report to the House as to what action should be taken in the premises, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers and to examine witnesses on oath or affirmation, and that said Hon. Henry May be notified of the passage of this resolution (if practicable) before action thereon by said committee."

Mr. Henry C. Burnett, of Kentucky, made the point of order that the resolution was not in order as a question of privilege.

The Speaker submitted the question to the House, and the House decided that the resolution was in order as involving a question of privilege.

By a vote of 56 yeas to 82 nays the House refused to lay the resolution on the table. It was then agreed to.

SEC. 2649. A proposition to censure a Member presents a question of privilege.

Early instances wherein the Speaker passed on questions presented as of privilege instead of submitting them directly to the House.

On January 24, 1842, Mr. Thomas W. Gilmer, of Virginia, presented the following resolution:

"Resolved, That in presenting for the consideration of the House a petition for the dissolution of the Union the Member from Massachusetts (Mr. Adams) has justly incurred the censure of this House."

Mr. Joseph R. Underwood, of Kentucky, objected to the reception of the resolution at this time, as not within the established order of business, and consequently not now in order.

The Speaker said that he considered this a matter of privilege, and referred to a precedent that occurred in 1836, in which the gentleman from Massachusetts offered a petition from certain slaves near Fredericksburg, Va., and on which occasion a resolution was offered by a gentleman from Virginia that the gentleman be brought to the bar and censured. Under this precedent the Chair did not feel at liberty to arrest the proceeding.

SEC. 2628. A newspaper charge that an officer of the House had conspired to influence legislation was considered as a question of privilege. On April 26, 1876, Mr. John D. White, of Kentucky, submitted as a question of privilege a preamble and resolution reciting an allegation from a newspaper charging that the Clerk of the House and some of his subordinates had conspired to prevent retrenchment of expenditures, and directing the Committee on Rules to investigate the charges and make report thereon.

Mr. William M. Springer, of Illinois, made the point of order that the resolution did not involve a question of privilege.

The Speaker overruled the point of order on the ground that the resolution, though going to the verge to which any matter of privilege of a Member of the House should go, involved enough of substance in its connection with the House and legislation to bring it within the rule and definition of a question of privilege.

If a newspaper charge that an officer is guilty of improper conduct or a crime raises a question of privilege, then most assuredly a newspaper charge that a Member is guilty of treason raises a question of privilege.

If the publication by a Member of false and scandalous charges against other Members raises a question of privilege, does not the publication of a charge by a Member that another Member is guilty of treason raise a question of privilege?

Note the following:

2637. The publication by a Member of alleged false and scandalous charges against the House and its Members, which he also reiterated in debate, was held to involve a question of privilege.

The House took action as to a Member who reiterated on the floor certain published charges against the House, although other business had intervened.

Instance wherein testimony taken before a committee and relating to the conduct of a Member was not reported to the House at once.

On July 29, 1892, Mr. Charles J. Boatner, of Louisiana, as a matter of privilege, submitted the following resolution, and demanded immediate consideration thereof, to wit:

"Whereas on page 216 of a book purporting to have been written by Thomas E. Watson, of Georgia, a Member of the House of Representatives, the following charge appears:

" 'Drunken Members have reeled about the aisles, a disgrace to the Republic. Drunken speakers have debated grave issues on the floor, and in the midst of maudlin ramblings have been heard to ask: "Mr. Speaker, where was I at?" ' and

"Whereas the publication of such charges, if untrue, is a grave wrong to this body, and if true the responsibility should be placed where it belongs; and

"Whereas the said Watson has reiterated the same on the floor of the House: Therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House, That a committee of five Members be appointed by the Speaker to investigate and report to the House whether such charges are true, and, if untrue, whether the said Watson has violated the privileges of the House and their recommendations relative to the same. That said committee have leave to sit during the sessions of the House, to send for persons and papers, to swear witnesses, and to compel their attendance."

Mr. Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, submitted the question of order, whether, the House having failed to take action respecting the remarks of Mr. Watson at the time he reiterated the charges on the floor of the House, and having passed to other business, it was not now too late to hold him to account therefor.

Mr. Louis E. Atkinson, of Pennsylvania, made the further point of order that the pending business before the House was a conference report, which was itself a matter of the highest privilege.

The Speaker held that the resolution submitted by Mr. Boatner presented a question of privilege, and that whenever the Speaker is of opinion that a question of privilege is involved in a proposition, he must entertain it in preference to any other business.

The Speaker also held that the pending business was the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 752, and that no conference report was pending. Both points of order were therefore overruled.

On August 8, 1892, Mr. Boatner submitted the report of the select committee authorized by the adoption of the resolution, and of which he had been made chairman.

This report stated that the committee summoned Mr. Watson and such witnesses as he indicated, and very soon the fact was developed that the charge as to drunken speakers referred to Mr. J. E. Cobb, of Alabama. The committee thereupon went on and examined testimony as to Mr. Cobb, no point of order being made that the testimony implicating a Member should first be reported to the House.

The committee concluded that the charge was a libel upon the membership, and recommended the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the charges made by Thomas E. Watson in his book against the House of Representatives, viz, 'that drunken Members have reeled about the aisles, a disgrace to the Republic,' and 'drunken Members have debated grave issues on the floor,' etc., are not true, and constitute an unwarranted assault upon the honor and dignity of the House and that such publication has the unqualified disapproval of the House."

This report was made in the last hours of the session and does not appear to have been acted on.

There are other precedents cited in section 22, page 192, volume 11, Cannon's Precedents; also beginning on page 198, of the same volume.

This proposed resolution does not charge that the gentleman from the Sixteenth Michigan District made these allegations. It charges that the Kalamazoo Gazette printed the statement that he made the charges, and it asks only that a committee of three be appointed to ascertain first whether the charge made in the Gazette that the gentleman from the Sixteenth District actually uttered the words is true or false; then it goes on from there. It does not assume that anyone is guilty of anything. It only asks for an inquiry.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. As I understand it, the gentleman is not going to press his resolution now.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I do not care about pressing it now.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am stepping out now. That is all I am interested in.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. But I do say to the gentleman that I will press it at some later time.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not entering into that. I hope the gentleman will serve notice on the leadership when he intends to do so, because then he proposes a question of something other than a dispute or a fight or a contest between two Members.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The point which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has alluded to is one which I want to definitely establish. That is whether or not the remark which precipitated this was in connection with or related to the acts of the gentleman from Michigan from the Fourth District [Mr. HOFFMAN] as chairman of a subcommittee duly authorized to perform certain duties by the chairman of the House Committee on Labor and Education.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Certainly the Gazette article carries that implication; otherwise there would be no privilege of the House. The statement in the paper is that the chairman of the subcommittee had no more authority than a rabbit. The report of the speech made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] carries the statement that "HOFFMAN had no more authority than a rabbit." That, of course, was referring to the holding of the hearings.

As I said before, whether there was authority or whether there was not, I am not arguing about that proposition, although there is plenty of precedent for it, but what I am saying is that in referring to a Member of Congress, who was acting in his official capacity, as a "pimp of Joe Stalin," which can only mean that he was the agent of Joe Stalin and was engaged in treasonable activities—that is what it means when you boil it down—that and the other statements raise a question of privilege of the House. I say to the new Members and to the old Members I can throw as much mud as anybody. Other people can do the same. Are we to open the door to everyone who is so constituted that he wants to go out and destroy the people's confidence in their Congress and their Congressmen?

There are rules for our conduct here in the House. Should there not be some rules which limit our utterances when they refer to our colleagues who are acting under authority—or whom we assume in fact to be acting under authority—of the House? That is the point.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield briefly.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That, I think, makes clear that there has been raised an entirely different issue than that involved in a statement of one Member concerning the personal activities of another Member uttered possibly in the heat of the congressional campaign. Certainly, if a duly created committee or subcommittee can be referred to in any such language, stating that they are the tool of the head of any other government, and particularly carrying the implications that were made in the statement cited, there is quite a different issue before the House than a simple reference by one Member to another during the course of a campaign.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. What any Member of this House cares to say about me as an individual is limited only by his good judgment and his good taste. What he says, however, as a Member of this House about me as a Member of the House who is attempting to act by authority of the House is something else again. If the House will not protect itself from the charge that it has within its membership a traitor, then why should we complain when editors and commentators try to smear us? That is the issue, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Briefly.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman intend to ask that the resolution be read for the information of the House and for its study between now and the time the gentleman may press his resolution?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Yes. Why does not the gentleman ask for time of his own?

Mr. LESINSKI. No; I will go right on.

Mr. Speaker, I realize the statement of the gentleman from Michigan. There are many words said during many different campaigns, and the gentleman evidently realizes it that way.

On that particular day I was invited by the steel workers to go along with them to Kalamazoo. While driving with them I asked many pertinent questions of the officials in the car in which I was riding, what the condition of the union was, what were their actual beliefs, whether they were "Commies" or not. That is what I wanted to know because I have always said that I have had no interest in any organization that was Commie-dominated.

When we got to Kalamazoo I found that the gentleman from Michigan was a one-man grand jury there, something in which I do not believe. Another thing, being the ranking Member, I knew of no inquiry to be made by a committee. So when I got to the gathering I told the people there point-blank plain that I had no authority, that I was not there authorized to tell them what they should or should not do, that I came there on my own, and that what I said was my own personal word. Knowing of the gentleman's being there with an inquiry, I decided I would stay a couple of days and find out what was going on.

That evening I spoke at the gathering. The newspaper quoted me correctly, that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] had no more right than a rabbit. That is the statement I made. I went on to explain my situation. Then toward the end of my talk I said these words, and I want the gentleman to listen to them: "That to me is what Mr. Hitler tried to do to the unions in Germany and that is why he wrecked the unions and made one controlled union; and that to me Mr. Hitler is a pimp of Joe Stalin, a prostitute." Those are my words. I have nothing to apologize for because I did not talk of the gentleman. I had on my mind only one thing and that was to tell the people over there I had no use for fascism or communism. That is why I made those remarks.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman saw the article that was printed in the Kalamazoo Gazette, did he not?

Mr. LESINSKI. I have.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman got my letter, did he not?

Mr. LESINSKI. I have. I got them here in Washington.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Just a moment.

Mr. COX. Will not the gentleman content himself with the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] that he was not referring to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has refused to yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman saw the statement in the Kalamazoo Gazette?

Mr. LESINSKI. The reporter told me about it and I told him plainly I was not quoted exactly as I said it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Did not the gentleman say at that meeting that HOFFMAN could do no worse than Hitler?

Mr. LESINSKI. No, sir.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman says on his honor as a Member of this House that he did not say that HOFFMAN was a pimp of Joe Stalin, a prostitute?

Mr. LESINSKI. That is not the way I said it. I said that to me Hitler was nothing but a pimp of Joe Stalin, a prostitute.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the question now is just as important as it ever was because if a newspaper can publish a statement charging a Member of the House with making a charge which I quoted here, then the gentleman from the Sixteenth District of Michigan is entitled, too, to the appointment of a committee, and so are the Members of the House, to learn whether or not the paper correctly quoted him. I have affidavits bearing out the charge carried in the newspapers. The Members of the House should know the truth. The gentleman from the Sixteenth District of Michigan has been libeled by the charge made in the Kalamazoo Gazette if the gentleman's statement that he never made the statement attributed to him is true. It is important that the House know whether the gentleman made the charge publicly, as an encouragement to a certain political organization, and as to whether or not it was true.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I was a member of the Committee on Expenditures last year of which the gentleman was chairman. Was there a subcommittee out there investigating?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. How many were on the subcommittee?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. One.

Mr. McCORMACK. Who was that?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I was. The gentleman from the Fourth Congressional District of Michigan.

Mr. McCORMACK. Who had the authority to appoint a subcommittee of one? I would like to know that.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I will tell the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. I would like to find out.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I will tell the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman will have to do a lot of telling.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I will tell the gentleman. It is very simple and clear. First, under authority of a decision of the United States Supreme Court (300 U. S.) in United States against Norris. Second, under Resolution 111, which gave the chairman of the Labor Committee authority to appoint committees and under the action taken by the Labor Committee according to its minutes of the 27th day of January, 1947. The foregoing authorities show the right of the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor to appoint a one-man subcommittee.

Mr. McCORMACK. Was this a subcommittee of the Committee on Labor?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Not the Committee on Expenditures?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Not the Committee on Expenditures. The gentleman from the Sixteenth District of Michigan was not present at this meeting to which I referred where the full committee authorized the chairman to appoint committees. My appointment was by Mr. Hartley, the chairman, I have that in writing, and I have it by wire.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman was a member of a subcommittee of the Committee on Labor of one?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is unusual.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. No, not this last summer.

Mr. McCORMACK. Not in the last 2 years. But never prior to that did we have subcommittees of one. The Democrats never allowed that.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. You have loaded the committees up now so it does not make any difference whether it is a committee of one or more. You are loading up these committees at the present time. You changed our own Committee on Expenditures from 15 to 10 to 18 to 7—we gave you 1 out of 3—now you take 2 to 1 and 4 extra.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman was not chairman of the Committee on Labor?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I am an ex-member. I was never chairman of the Labor Committee.

Mr. McCORMACK. Did the chairman of the Committee on Labor officially delegate the gentleman from Michigan as a subcommittee of one?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. By wire and by letter, both.

Mr. McCORMACK. As a subcommittee of one?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Of one.

Mr. McCORMACK. Was there any discussion with any Democratic member?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. No. At least I do not know of any.

Mr. McCORMACK. None?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. No; although I do not know. Nor do I know of any protest until the speech on the 13th.

Mr. McCORMACK. So the Democrats on that committee were not even consulted about this?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. They never made any protest at any meetings that I ever held.

Mr. McCORMACK. But is it not rather arbitrary for the chairman to appoint a subcommittee without consulting the ranking minority Member? We know the procedure of committees. The gentleman, as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures would not appoint a subcommittee without consulting with Carter Manasco, would he?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I recall some of the Members on the gentleman's side writing reports, and they all signed them.

Mr. McCORMACK. Would the gentleman, as chairman, appoint a subcommittee without consulting with Carter Manasco, the ranking minority Member?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I know I always do——

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman would not do that, would he?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I never did. I appointed a subcommittee of one, Mr. HARDY, a Democrat from Virginia. He was appointed to go down into Florida and inquire into something, sure, and he submitted a report and a good one, and it was all right. The gentleman from Alabama, Mr. Manasco, who was ranking minority Member was consulted and he made no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, the gentleman did not take any pride in that. Of course, you are the Republican Chairman.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I was. And I sent a lone dyed in the wool Democrat from Ole Virginny all alone and the results could not have been better.

Mr. McCORMACK. Sure.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman has quite thoroughly, may I say to the gentleman——

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. May I have a couple of more minutes, Mr. Majority Leader?

Mr. McCORMACK. It is commencing to be really enjoyable.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Yes, but you are getting a little away from the topic.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is a perfectly worthy topic, yes.

Mr. KEEFE. Just a moment, the gentleman yielded to me. I rise to ask a question which perhaps might be in the minds of most people on the floor, and that is, are we to conclude as an ultimate fact from what has already thus far in this matter boiled down, that the contention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI], is that he did not call the gentleman a pimp of Joe Stalin in the exact language which he charged was published in the papers?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, the gentleman can speak for himself, maybe.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there? We might just as well be fair about this thing and perfectly frank about it with ourselves and with one another. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI]—and I hold no brief for him—has stated in his place on the floor of this House what he contends was the language that he used, and his statement is a repudiation of the charges that have been made, that is, that he called the gentleman from Michigan a pimp of Joe Stalin. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in good faith, as brethren here in a common cause, we ought to be willing to accept the word of our fellow Member. The gentleman from Michigan has denied that he called the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] a pimp, and that ought to satisfy everybody and end this controversy.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Does the gentleman contend then that the House—where a paper publishes that statement, and where I can produce affidavits from the people who were present—should overlook it?

Mr. COX. I contend that under the circumstances that the House ought not to dignify an unimportant happening by the setting up of a committee to ascertain whether or not the gentleman from Michigan made such a statement as charged when the gentleman here on the floor, in the presence of the Members of this body, has stated in exact language exactly what he said, and since that language does not offend the rules the controversy is not a matter of further concern of the House. The setting up of a committee to ascertain what was said when we now know what was said, would be, in my judgment, a colossal piece of foolishness.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I would like to say to the gentleman from Georgia, I wonder if I went down in a district adjoining the gentleman's district and charged him with being a traitor to his country and several other things——

Mr. COX. But the gentleman——

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. All right, let me answer—and if the gentleman had affidavits and statements of friends and then I came on the floor and said, "Well, I have always admired the gentleman from Georgia; he is a fine, good citizen. I never said it," must the House accept my denial?

Mr. COX. Under those circumstances I would accept the word of my brother Congressman as representing exactly his position as to what he said and did, and would not haggle about it. I think the gentleman does himself a disservice when he haggles.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. If the gentleman is talking about me, my answer is that I am not haggling.

Mr. COX. Whether or not he will accept the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] his fellow Congressman, as to what happened in Michigan on this occasion.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. All right. Now I will say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], all right, you can make that statement here on the floor if you want to.

What the argument of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] leads to is this: If newspaper A says that Congressman B said that Congressman C was a traitor and if Congressman B, when the statement is called to his attention on the floor, replies that he never made it, and, thereafter, testimony taken shows that Congressman B did say that Congressman C was a traitor, then, under the logic of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], Congressman C is a traitor because, forsooth, the word of a Congressman must be taken, even when shown to be false. That sort of reasoning does not appeal to me.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. And I will say this to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX]. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] had three opportunities to deny that he made the statement. He had written requests three times to deny it. He never did deny it. Only when it was brought here to the attention of the House and then he seemed rather uncertain about what he has said. Now, if you want to defend that sort of procedure, defend him.

Mr. COX. Let me say that I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] rendered a disservice to himself when he failed to embrace the first opportunity to make proper amends to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. My hide is thick. I am not overly sensitive. I do not hesitate to hand it out and I can take it. In the 14 years I have been here I have vigorously and bitterly assailed views and policies which I believed fallacious and injurious to our Nation, but I have never, no, not once, made a personal attack upon a colleague. I have taken a lot of abuse from political opponents who have no sense of decency. But there is a limit. This attack, under the sponsorship of the CIO, goes too far. This situation is brought to your attention today because, in my humble judgment, it is time that the House put its stamp of disapproval upon Members of the House who falsely charge their colleagues with disloyalty and worse, if that is possible.

Kalamazoo County juts into the block of counties which comprise the Fourth Congressional District of Michigan. The Kalamazoo Gazette has readers in my old home town of Constantine, which lies some 60 miles to the south, where I lived in my boyhood days, where I have many friends. It goes into Sturgis, Three Rivers, Mendon, Colon, Fabius, all through the farming district of St. Joe County. It goes into Paw Paw, Gobles, Bloomingdale, Hartford, Keeler, all through the farming community of Van Buren County; it goes into Cassopolis, Dowagiac, Jones, all through Cass County. It goes into Plainwell, Wayland, Otsego, yes, into my home town of Allegan in Allegan County.

It goes into the home of my son and his wife and my two grandchildren—boys of 12 and 13 years of age. It goes into the home of another son and his wife; the home of a grandson who is now a midshipman at the Academy; the home of a granddaughter, the winner of a scholarship, and now in the University of Michigan; the home of a granddaughter 12 years of age.

The 12-year-old girl, Evie, picks up the Kalamazoo Gazette which comes to her home 7 days a week. Kid-like, she looks at the funnies. It may be she thinks Grandpa is a nice old fellow. Perhaps she sees the words, "Representative LESINSKI calls Representative HOFFMAN a pimp of Joe Stalin." She says, "Mamma, the Kalamazoo Gazette says grampa is a pimp. What is a pimp, mamma?"

I say to you, my colleagues of the House, what do you, deep down in your hearts, honestly think of this situation?

Overlong, men and women throughout the country, who were dependent upon their pay checks for a livelihood, have been driven from their jobs by goon squads; have been vilified, slandered and libeled by propagandists who speak, not for the rank and file of the CIO, but for a few, a very few, of their leaders, who are using the union organizations for their own selfish ends.

Is it not time that the responsible officials at the head of the CIO—one of them, Philip Murray, its president—publicly condemn actions of that kind?

Overlong, Members of Congress, seeking to express their honest convictions as to what was good for labor, have been falsely charged with being antilabor, unkind, uncharitable, as taking the bread out of the mouths of the workers' children. Those charges have been made by union officials, sometimes by representatives of the international.

Just as the action taken against the individual worker seeks to deprive him of his right to earn a livelihood, so these false and malicious charges—in this case, this false and malicious charge—seek to intimidate the people's Representatives, to frighten them, to prevent them from expressing their views on labor legislation.

This charge, according to the Kalamazoo Gazette, was made at a mass meeting which the CIO radio announcer said was presided over by Glen S. Sigman, personal representative of CIO President Philip Murray.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI], we are advised, is to be chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor. If he will go into Michigan at a mass meeting, attended, so it was said by the radio announcer of the union, by more than 1,000 people, there falsely charge, there make the untrue charge, that one of his colleagues is a "pimp of Joe Stalin," what will he do to industry's representatives when they appear here before the House committee, if they venture to oppose the legislation demanded by the CIO?

My colleagues, how many of you, if this charge published in the Kalamazoo Gazette goes unchallenged, will feel free to vote your convictions, when before the House comes a bill to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act, reenact the Wagner Act, write legislation affecting organized labor—legislation either opposed or supported by the politicians in the CIO?

It is apparent that it was the purpose of the goon squad to intimidate the employees of the Shakespeare Co. at Kalamazoo. It is apparent that it is the purpose of the CIO, its international and district representatives, to frighten, to intimidate the Members of Congress who are about to consider labor legislation.

The Washington press tells us there is a lobby of 45 CIO members on the Hill today.

The Supreme Court a week ago today publicly announced that the people of the States had the right to enact laws which would protect the man who desired to work.

This House, in my humble judgment, should in some way assure its membership that it will protect them from intimidation and coercion when they attempt to voice their convictions.

Although granted permission to print as a part of my remarks the resolution sent to the Speaker's desk, because that resolution contains other remarks published in the Gazette, which perhaps have not been referred to by me today, I will not print it here but will wait until it is offered on some future occasion.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I know nothing about this occurrence that has just gone on except what I have heard on the floor today, but many of us who were here in the House understood that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] sent a resolution to the Speaker and so stated. The gentleman has consumed the hour for which, under the rule, he was permitted to talk. He has talked. Then he buttressed that talk, as I understand from the floor here, by a resolution. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] seemed to indicate there was something in that resolution with which he did not agree. The rest of us would like to know just where the resolution is, and what is in it.

The SPEAKER. There is a paper lying on the desk of the Speaker. It starts by saying "Resolution." The gentleman from Michigan never did offer the resolution. He said he was sending up to the Speaker's chair, and he intended to offer, a resolution, but he did not.

Mr. MICHENER. Then the status is that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] sent a paper up there, and there it lies. What will become of it?

The SPEAKER. There is nothing before the House at this time.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include one of the finest editorials I have ever read, which appeared in the Boston Post, entitled "Captain Courageous," when that great newspaper came out in a militant manner in support of President Truman and made such marked contributions to the President's carrying Massachusetts.

I further ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial that appeared in the Sheboygan Press, of Wisconsin, on November 11, 1948, and further to extend my remarks and include an address recently delivered by Floyd B. Odlum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE BUDGET

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the Congress faces two grave responsibilities, the maintenance of peace abroad and the preservation of prosperity at home; we must keep out of war and we must avoid another depression.

The consequences of a Nation-wide depression are too recent in the minds of men to require elaboration.

And even clearer is the realization of the hazards of another war. It could mean the repudiation of the national debt; the establishment of economic and military dictatorships which might not be completely shaken off in 100 years. It would involve deficit financing of crushing proportions, possibly the confiscation of private property, as in Great Britain; in any event a return to rigid regimentation of the most drastic character and the abandonment of national fiscal and industrial status which probably could not be recovered within the next generation. It would mean—even if we won—the destruction of major cities and loss of life measured by millions.

There is only one way to avoid war, and that is to remain so strong that no nation will dare attack us. Weakness invites invasion. We must maintain superiority on land and sea, and especially in the air. We must equip and maintain the most powerful military force in the world, and support an adequate and progressive domestic economy at home.

This can be effected only through vast expenditures, and the budget just received from the President is designed to implement both national defense and national prosperity.

It is the largest budget ever recommended in time of peace. As a matter of fact it is not a peacetime budget. We have been fighting a cold war since 1945—and in recent months a losing war. The stalemate in Europe and the debacle in Asia have materially prejudiced our strategic position.

Defense of the Nation from subjugation and exploitation is a subject which brooks no debate and considered in this light the amounts proposed in the budget are not excessive.

It is essentially a war budget. Half the amount carried is to pay for measures to prevent or prepare for future war. Another quarter is consumed in the cost of past wars, in provisions for care of veterans, interest on the national debt, and related expenditures. In other words more than 75 percent of this budget relates to past and prospective wars. If the war items could be eliminated we could this year pay $30,000,000,000 on the public debt.

But these are arbitrary items on which we have little or no discretion. We have no choice but to pay and the only latitude we have is in the exercise of care and economy in their administration.

On a close analysis, many of these expenditures proposed by the budget are in the nature of capital expenditures. They fall within the same category as the purchase of rolling stock by railroads, or the construction of generating plants by utilities. They are part of a long-term program of national defense and continued economic stability, the benefits of which will continue to accrue through coming years.

The defense of the Nation is necessarily projected far into the future, and current expenditures for that purpose, beyond mere maintenance, should not be wholly charged to the annual supply bills of any one session of Congress.

It is a burden which must be borne regardless of cost or consequences. But, let me insist that, as necessary and imperative as it is, security should be provided at the lowest cost obtainable. We must spend generously for defense, but we should handle such expenditures soundly and wisely. We are confronted today with a debt of a quarter of a trillion dollars. Merely the interest on our existing debt, although funded at the lowest rate at which a public debt was ever financed, aggregates $5,000,000,000 a year, an amount which must come out of our tax income before unobligated revenue is available for any other purpose whatsoever.

Every item in the budget should be subjected to every possible test to determine whether the services or commodities so provided cannot be secured more economically or whether they cannot be dispensed with altogether. If, for example, national safety can be insured for one penny less than $15,000,000,000 that penny should be saved, and as many more as the situation permits under the most exacting analysis.

The welfare items should be especially scrutinized. Whether a dollar can be advantageously expended or invested is not the criterion. The question is whether it should be spent for any purpose other than debt retirement at this critical time.

There is a disposition to assume that the National Treasury is a bottomless well with a never-failing flow of inexhaustible funds untrammeled by natural economic law or economic principle, capable of creating something from nothing, adequate to meet every draft drawn by the Committee on Appropriations and endorsed by the Congress. Public funds, even when appropriated by Congress, are not like the oil from the widow's cruse, magically self-perpetuating, nor like Aladdin's lamp, to be invoked and replenished by the simple expediency of legislative enactment. Passing an appropriation bill does not create money.

The original plan under which each appropriation bill carried with it a revenue provision for raising the funds appropriated had many advantages; and no appropriation bill should be passed in this session without careful consideration simultaneously of the source from which such funds are to be drawn.

The only source of funds appropriated by this Congress is taxes or loans, and the public debt is long since too large to warrant a resort to loans except under the most urgent and imperative conditions.

Regardless of any merit, however convincing the argument that an item calling for an appropriation will contribute to the public welfare, it must always be subject to the question: Can we afford it? The situation is too critical, the public debt is too large, our national resources are too limited to provide for any expenditure which can be abandoned or postponed over this emergency. Desirable as are rivers and harbors, reclamation, irrigation, public works, aid to navigation, and the public health—however appealing social reforms may appear—when such expenditures involve deficit financing they must yield to the urgent necessity of national security and economic stability.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Do I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is against an appropriation for public education, and so forth, and so on?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly not. I strongly favor all of them. Whether they should be provided for at this particular time is yet to be determined.

Mr. Speaker, the budget comes to us in the red. That is the lamentable fact, though not surprising. The expenditure program approved at the last session did not justify a deliberate lessening of income. That was quite apparent then. It is even more evident now.

May I remind you that within 6 months after the close of the fiscal year in which World War II hostilities ceased, President Truman submitted to the Congress a balanced budget. That was the budget for the fiscal year 1948 presented in January 1947. It was in balance despite the fact that debt retirement had but recently been effected to the extent of more than $20,000,000,000. If anyone desires a citation, he will find this set out on page M–13 of the 1948 Budget.

But there began at that time a 2-year hiatus in the complete control of our Federal finances, with the result that the present budget as now presented is again in the red.

Expenditures during the fiscal year commencing next July 1 are estimated to aggregate $41,858,000,000.

Availability for the liquidation of such estimated expenditures is estimated at $40,985,000,000, or a shortage of $873,000,000.

It is our job and our responsibility to make up that shortage, and we can undertake it mainly in three ways:

First. Search out ways of curbing proposed expenditures without hurt to the general welfare.

Second. Curtail current expenditure programs where changed conditions justify that course.

Third. Raise additional revenue.

The first step is largely a task for the Committee on Appropriations of the two Houses. I believe we can pledge that the House committee will endeavor in every way to discharge this task faithfully and scrupulously. And we solicit the cooperation of every Member of the House.

The following summation of proposed expenditures by objects indicates the difficulty of the job:

|---|---|
| International affairs and finance | $6,709,000,000 |
| National defense | 14,268,000,000 |
| Veterans' services and benefits | 5,496,000,000 |
| Interest on the public debt | 5,450,000,000 |
| Social welfare, health and security | 2,358,000,000 |
| Agriculture and agricultural resources | 1,662,000,000 |
| Natural resources | 1,861,000,000 |
| All other | 4,054,000,000 |
| Total | 41,858,000,000 |

The second step is not altogether a function of the Committee on Appropriations. The appropriate legislative committees can be relied on to cooperate. The legislative committees might concern themselves not alone with current expenditures but with projected or potential commitments under existing authority entailing Treasury withdrawals in subsequent fiscal years. Our problem is not an immediate one. Our concern is to adopt a sound, dependable fiscal course.

The third step, of course, is within the province of the Committee on Ways and Means.

There is still another step and a very important one, that of authorizing legislation.

Expenditures flow from appropriations, and appropriations flow from legislative enactments. The appropriation committees are hampered in maintaining sound expenditure levels when authorizing legislation piles up new or added demands upon the Federal purse. All too often costs, when passing authorizing legislation, seem to be of secondary concern. It is of paramount importance with a public debt the magnitude of ours and tax burdens such as we are now carrying and which we cannot expect to lessen for some time to come. No more effective means exist of curbing expenditure than to check at the source measures embodying authority to make appropriations.

Congress should consider carefully the initiation of new expenditures and new Federal activities. All such proposals start with small appropriations, but with the practical certainty that in future years they will require millions of dollars as the program develops. It should be remembered that once begun, they cannot easily be discontinued, regardless of the expenditures which they entail. The initiation of activities on small-scale expenditures is a process familiar to us all. But as we will recall, they usually blossom forth into ramifications requiring the expenditure of unexpected sums which must be provided in future years, and in deficit budgets every added expenditure is reflected in corresponding increases in the public debt.

There are many who do not seem to be greatly concerned over the magnitude of the public debt; many who are not averse to letting it sort of coast along, curtailing it according to our circumstances, without any determined purpose to liquidate it as rapidly as might be under a definite plan. Of course, that is the easiest way, a hand-to-mouth plan; let tomorrow take care of itself, the line of least resistance. We had an example of that in the last session when in the face of rising expenditures, occasioned by the international situation, Congress proceeded to reduce the revenue. I have discussed the subject before, and I refer to it again because it is so vital to the fiscal stability of the Government and the welfare of present and future generations.

The public debt at its peak was $279,214,000,000. At the end of December—that is, at the end of last month—it had been reduced to $252,800,000,000. The interest appropriation on the debt for the peak year was $4,500,000,000, although it was floated at a minimum rate of interest. You might consult page 785, Senate Document No. 85, Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, to get the exact amount of the interest upon the national debt at that time. For the fiscal year commencing next July 1, the interest item, according to the budget now before us, is $5,450,000,000, or an increase over the peak debt year, 1946, of $950,000,000, despite the debt reduction in the interim of $27,000,000,000.

Now, what does that indicate? It means that without a substantial and periodic debt retirement, there is a continually increasing interest bill, eventually attaining a level of possibly astounding proportions, depending upon the rate at which refunding may be accomplished, because as the vast amount of securities, none of which exceed 10 years in maturity, fall due, aggregating as much as $30,000,000 in 1 year under peacetime conditions, and with the demand for money which we may expect at that time, the rate of interest must be raised; it cannot be refunded at the present low rate of interest. Consequently, without a substantial debt retirement, as rapidly as can be effected, a continually increasing interest bill of large proportions, depending upon the rate at which refunding must be accomplished, must be met annually.

That interest money is money which otherwise might be channeled into roads, into flood-control work, into assistance to States for education, into inland water transportation and power, into soil conservation, into rural electrification, into aid to the aged and infirm and many other worthy objects which would contribute to the enrichment of our people and so contribute to a happier and more prosperous America. But instead of spending it for that purpose we must pay it out in interest upon this great debt hanging over us, an old man of the sea in time of peace and a sword of Damocles in time of war.

It is our responsibility, therefore, to cut that interest bill and to effect economies which can be secured without injury or prejudice to the public welfare in order that the largest possible amount of the national revenues may be utilized for national benefits.

We should keep always in mind the devastating effect that would ensue from pyramiding upon the present debt, or any substantial part of it, the cost of another world conflict.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. There is an article in Look magazine, I believe, which states that we are spending $400,000,000 a year in Japan, in addition to the cost of our military operations there, trying to help the Japanese. Does not the gentleman think we had better let the Japanese go to work and make their own living, and use some of that money to improve our own country and make it possible for us to pay the interest and sinking fund on the debt we now owe?

Mr. CANNON. That is a subject which would require, for elaboration, more time than we have this afternoon; but let me say to the gentleman that whenever we abandon the Eastern Hemisphere to Russian communism we invite a situation which must be met in the future by sums compared with which the $400,000,000 to which the gentleman refers will be inconsequential.

Mr. RANKIN. This article goes on to say that what we are doing there now is provoking communism instead of discouraging it. I was just wondering if we are really getting anywhere. I do not mean provoking him but provoking those people who follow the Communist line. I did not understand we were fighting Japan just to take them over and raise them.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. After we have cut down our public debt from $279,000,000,000 to $252,000,000,000, it requires larger appropriations to take care of it than it did before. Will the gentleman elaborate on that?

Mr. CANNON. I have discussed that in my statement and, suggest that the gentleman look at my remarks when they appear in the RECORD.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. In order to reply to the question propounded by the gentleman from Mississippi, will the gentleman from Missouri be kind enough to permit me to comment briefly on it?

Mr. CANNON. I shall be glad to have the gentleman discuss the subject. He is perhaps as familiar with it as any Member of the House.

Mr. STEFAN. We should know that under international law we are obligated to feed the civilian population of conquered countries at a certain minimum amount. I want to make a statement with reference to the amount he mentioned in this newspaper article with which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is familiar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PATMAN). The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 15 additional minutes.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, certainly there is no inclination on my part to object. Many Members have sat here listening with a great deal of interest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. But there are many more special orders, including one, the next following, by the ranking Republican member of the committee. I do not know how much of his time would be used, but I do not believe there should be an undue extension of time, because that will prejudice others who have special orders.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. The Army under GARIOA is feeding these people in the occupation areas. The gentleman from Missouri, and the members of the Committee on Appropriations know that the Army has reduced the amount of money that we are spending in occupied areas to feed the people and is making every effort to make them self-sufficient.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman from Nebraska had the information that I have, he would know that we never did admit that it was our obligation to feed the people of conquered countries. I know that because I lived in a country which was conquered once, and which was starved for 20 years.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Certainly the statement has been repeatedly made by representatives of the administrative branch of the Government to the Committee on Appropriations, and to the subcommittee dealing with the Army, as well as to the Committee on Defense, in connection with the presentation of requests for GARIOA that under the Hague and Geneva conventions we do have a responsibility to feed the country when we occupy it, at least to the extent necessary to prevent disease and unrest. I think he knows that that has been cited as authority for making of these appropriations and the responsibilities that we have incurred.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. On page 7 of the President's budget message he states he expects at a later date to request funds for providing military supplies to western European countries. Can the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations give us any rough idea at this time as to how much funds may be involved in that request?

Mr. CANNON. I imagine that no one in the department could at this time estimate accurately the amount which may be involved. As the gentleman knows, we must from time to time revise our estimates to meet rapidly changing conditions abroad. Certainly the Committee on Appropriations of the House will have an opportunity to pass upon the amount or the necessity for any amount for such purposes.

Mr. Speaker, the budget message portrays with considerable clarity our present and prospective financial status. It makes possible an understanding approach to the questions involved. Our final conclusions, of course, must rest on exhaustive inquiries in the course of the hearings.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that we can effect sizable and justifiable reductions in the budget.

I have yet to see a budget of which this was not true. It is the President's budget, true, but it would be humanly impossible for the President personally to determine the amount necessary to implement the thousands of objects which the budget embraces. He must rely upon subordinate agencies to work out such details, and I am certain will welcome any method we may find for efficiently attaining the same objectives proposed at less cost.

As I said earlier, much help in effecting economies can be given by the legislative committees, but I have in mind particularly the Committee on Armed Services.

The appropriations for the armed services for the current fiscal year, plus contractual authority of $220,000,000, amount to $10,674,477,413. That was the amount of new spending money voted, some of which, of course, will not be drawn from the Treasury until the fiscal year 1950 and fiscal years subsequent thereto. In addition to that vast sum, current fiscal year Treasury withdrawals will be augmented appreciably in consequence of the supplemental National Defense Act of 1948, which did not become a law until May 21, 1948.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PATMAN). The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] has again expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 20 additional minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of all other special orders today I may be allowed to complete this speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, that act appropriated $929,000,000, and included contractual authorizations aggregating $2,275,000,000. For the fiscal year 1950 the budget proposed a new obligation available for the armed services under the heading of "National Military Establishment," including contractual authorizations of $2,058,000,000, amounting to $13,486,000,000.

On the expenditure or Treasury withdrawal side for the armed services alone the budget estimates these amounts, predicated upon existing legislation:

For the current 1949 fiscal year, $11,260,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1950, $12,760,000,000.

Is it necessary to devote that much money to national defense? Is it not possible, with altered circumstances, to permit the recapture of a part of the huge amount voted at the last session of Congress? Is it possible appropriately to ready our armed forces for appreciably less by pursuing more economical practices and eliminating many war-born practices of a costly nature, which do not contribute to military preparedness? Have all war-created activities, justified solely by war, been eliminated? Have all costly practices initiated during the war, no longer justified, been discontinued? Those are questions, the answers to which no one can be certain of until there is careful scrutiny of the estimates and justifications. So far as I am aware, there has been no searching inquiry as to some of these questions since the Seventy-ninth Congress when we were pursuing a systematic program of recapturing appropriation balances.

There must be further inquiries by the Appropriations Committee, and I trust also by the Armed Services Committee as well. If Members of the House have any ideas or suggestions in that connection I can assure them that such suggestions will be welcomed and carefully weighed by the committee.

Like many others, I feel that we should derive some substantial economies in consequence of the National Security Act of 1947. Thus far it would seem that about all that has been done is to superimpose upon existing agencies a super agency occasioning larger instead of lesser expenditures. It is to be hoped that the Armed Services Committee will review that law and inquire into its workings with a view to achieving more efficient and more economic results. It is a matter of no little urgency if we are to realize savings either during the remainder of this fiscal year or the ensuing fiscal year.

It is the generally accepted fact that material economies must come very largely from lessened pay rolls. It is my considered opinion that the armed services and those other agencies of the Government that were expanded during the war years have not reduced their staffs to levels which would be adequately efficient to the dispatch of the essential functions. Overstaffing no doubt exists in other places. I am inclined to doubt whether the heads of the agencies concern themselves enough on this matter. Maybe they lack the experience of having had to meet pay rolls. I do not recall any evidence of economy in pay rolls by the heads of agencies since the time the late Claude Swanson shortly after his assumption of office as Secretary of the Navy ordered a 10 percent reduction in the Navy Department's civilian staff. Possibly a helpful step would be to set up in each agency a qualified group whose business it would be to survey jobs and search out ways of economizing in their personnel. Overstaffing, however, is not alone responsible for heavy pay-roll costs. We liberalized the Classification Act of 1923 a few years back and we have since been passing a succession of pay increase measures all adding to the cost of standing Federal agenices and the cost of running the Federal Government. Despite the fact that we have a budget in the red and face a deficit this fiscal year, there is a hue and cry for further increases in the Classification Act ratings. How can we justify further pay increases under such circumstances? We can justify to the American people the grant of funds for paying a living wage to all employees who may not now be drawing a living wage, but beyond that common sense dictates that we must not go at this time. In the higher pay brackets of Civil Service employees there may be some isolated case where sufficient skills and talents might demand higher compensation in private employment, but it has always been so. In the great majority of cases I daresay that Federal employees are drawing higher pay than persons in comparable positions on the outside. The truth is we have too many employees in the higher pay brackets. The Classification Act has developed into an excellent vehicle for that very situation. There are too many employees now who are nothing more than senior clerks who have been clothed with high-sounding titles which carry added pay, and when one gets one of these titles it is apt to mean further expense such as a private room, a personal secretary, and possibly a special messenger.

I entertain no objection to advances within pay grades which occur periodically when efficiency standards are maintained, but pay rolls constitute such a large proportion of the cost of government that I feel we should exercise more voice in their circumscription and administration. We should see that a proper balance is established and maintained as regards distribution of employees in grade and that might mean stopping grade advancements above a certain level—say $5,000 or $6,000—without advance approval by Congress.

When we think of Federal pay we should not lose sight of the fact that we have provided a liberal retirement law, that there is a short workweek and a short workday, that there are numbers of holidays with pay and often with extra time off, and that that there are generous leave periods, including sick leave. These are benefits that cannot be overlooked in determining fair and just compensation. There are occasions when we lose good men to industry or other fields of employment, but that is the experience of every employer. By and large, the service is attractive to those who are in it and is sufficiently attractive to draw capable or promising new employees when needed. The fact cannot be stressed too often or too forcibly that our financial status demands the exercise of the most rigid economy. Essential demands are too heavy to allow any leeway for continued unessential costs or to take on new obligations that are not of a self-liquidating character or that will not immediately or in the future contribute in proportion to the national wealth.

As it all adds up we have a real task ahead of us to guard and preserve our financial integrity. The committee will have this objective in view. What it will be able to do depends upon its findings at the detailed examinations it will conduct on the budget estimates. What economies it can effect must await those examinations. Any prophecy of the final net result could only be a guess.

That raises the question of the legislative budget, provided for in the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. We have had 2 years of experience under that law, and they have been rather disappointing. Its faults, and its disadvantages were clearly pointed out when the legislation was under consideration by the House, and still more effectively in the Senate. Its advocates, and they were few and relatively inexperienced, could not defend it, but pleaded for a trial, and the House consented to give it a trial. At the first session of the Eightieth Congress, the majority Members of the Legislative Budget Committee guessed, and I use the word advisedly, that there would be effected an expenditure saving of between four and one-half and six billion dollars. The Senate insisted on the lower figure and the House proposed the higher figure. Incidentally, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] and I cast the determining vote which committed the House to the larger proposed saving. However, the difference between the two Houses was never reconciled and no legislative budget was adopted. Now, bear in mind those amounts applied to expenditures and not to appropriations.

To make expenditure savings of such proportions would necessitate reducing appropriations by considerably larger amounts because appropriations remain available for expenditure after the close of the fiscal year for which made. The official record for the first trial year shows appropriation reductions of $3,162,877,443, as may be noted on pages 796 and 797, Senate Document 106. As I have explained, that means a gross expenditure reduction well under that amount. So the first attempt with the legislative budget culminated in a difference between the two Houses, both dominated by same political party, which was never resolved, and in a net result of something less than half of the goal advocated by the House and about two-fifths less than the goal advocated by the Senate.

At the second session of the Eightieth Congress the majority members of the Legislative Budget Committee again hazarded a guess. The Members of the two bodies were more in unison and more conservative. Their joint aim was an expenditures saving of two and one-half billion dollars. The official record for the session shows appropriation reductions of $2,770,628,775, as may be seen on pages 894, 895, and 896 of Senate Document 205, and that, too, does not mean expenditure reductions of that amount, but rather an amount well under the objective which had been set.

Now, what was accomplished by these two attempts? What useful purpose was served? Some Member of the House—who was not a member of the joint committee—has been reported in the press as saying that the procedure creates an incentive to accomplish a more effective economy job. Let me ask, Mr. Speaker, do we need any more incentive than a glance at the public debt, the "must" expenditures, and the tax burdens we are carrying?

May I call attention, and particularly the attention of the new Members, to this very voluminous volume.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. I have been listening to the gentleman from Missouri with a great deal of interest. I would like to ask this question: Does the gentleman, who is now chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, expect to make as good or better a showing regarding the reduction of needless expenditures of the Government as did the Eightieth Congress? I would like to know just what he is thinking, and I think the American people would like to know.

Mr. CANNON. That is the very thing I am talking about. As has been said, it is utterly impossible, without hearings and without investigation, and especially in view of rapidly changing conditions, to make anything like an accurate estimate at this time. That is why the legislative budget system in effect at this time is impractical and unworkable.

Mr. JENSEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. JENSEN. Then I would like to know, since the gentleman has given me the answer that he has, is the gentleman going to attempt to make any kind of savings whatever under the budget estimate of the President?

Mr. CANNON. I certainly am, and I trust I shall have the cooperation and help of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman knows he always has that support.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BONNER in the chair). The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. I think the gentleman knows my record well enough, since I have been on the Appropriations Committee with him for the past three terms, to know that I have always supported the gentleman or anyone else who attempted to cut out unnecessary expenditures.

I must say in all fairness to the new Members of the Congress and to the American people that there have been many times when I was terribly disappointed in the position the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] took on expenditures. There were many times when I felt he wanted to spend too much money on a lot of things that were not necessary. I hope that now, since we have a big job ahead of us, as the gentleman has just recited to the House, he will go along with the Republicans and the Democrats on the committee who do want to cut out unnecessary expenditures. I am sure, after listening to the gentleman, that that is what he intends to do.

Mr. CANNON. I trust that the gentleman, when he extends his remarks, will specify the times in which the gentleman from Missouri has approved expenditures of which the gentleman from Iowa did not approve, and I will say that I recall, myself, instances in which I advocated economy when the gentleman voted against me.

Mr. JENSEN. Will the gentleman then go to the trouble of picking out those instances where I have supported legislation or appropriation bills in greater sums than has the gentleman from Missouri? If the gentleman wants me to pick out the many instances where I have supported economies which I felt were necessary, and put them in the RECORD, then certainly I should expect the gentleman to do likewise, and I think the gentleman will in all fairness do that.

Mr. CANNON. I will not wait for that. When we brought on the floor a proposition to eliminate the yearly appropriation for guayule, on which we threw away millions of dollars.

Mr. JENSEN. For what?

Mr. CANNON. The appropriation for guayule.

Mr. JENSEN. Guayule rubber?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. JENSEN. What did I do?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman voted to continue the appropriation when I urged its discontinuance, and we have spent millions of dollars on it.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman is picking out peanuts to talk about. Now let us talk about some of the things the gentleman has voted for which amount to tens and thousands of times the little guayule appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman may give them now, but $50,000 is not peanuts.

Mr. JENSEN. Will the gentleman give me time to name some of them?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; proceed.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman was quite instrumental as a Member in advocating not one but dozens of things that I opposed, but it happens that they were in full committee, and the gentleman knows, as everybody in the House knows, that we cannot talk about the battles we had in full committee.

Mr. CANNON. To what does the gentleman refer? The gentleman says I voted for appropriations of which he disapproved. Let the gentleman specify them.

Mr. JENSEN. All right. Then I will turn around and say the same thing to you. Name some of the things that I approved.

Mr. CANNON. I just named one.

Mr. JENSEN. Oh, yes; guayule.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and the gentleman does not deny it. Fifty thousand dollars absolutely thrown away.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to this voluminous document. Every word in it and every figure in it must eventully come before the House and be passed upon by the membership of the House during this session of Congress. It is a 1,950-page volume. Apart from the transmittal message and various tables and indexes it comprises 1,345 pages of details which must be reviewed in detail by the Committee on Appropriations. It is a task that takes weeks of study and exploration before we can reach sound conclusions and bring our recommendations to the House.

This provision in the Legislative Reorganization Act specifies that before this detailed examination can be made, a joint committee of the House and Senate shall first make an estimate of all Federal receipts for the ensuing fiscal year.

Second, make an estimate of expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year.

Third, make a recommendation for the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditures during the ensuing fiscal year, including a reserve for deficiencies.

Note that it is not the maximum amount to be appropriated, but the maximum amount to be expended during the first year of the availability of these appropriations.

Fourth, make a recommendation for a reduction in the public debt if estimated receipts exceed estimated expenditures.

Fifth, make a recommendation to be included in a concurrent resolution which shall accompany the joint committee's report expressing the sense of the Congress that the public debt be increased by the amount of the excess if the estimated expenditures exceed the estimated receipts.

You understand there is nothing binding on anybody after all this is done. All these preliminaries are required before the regularly constituted agencies of the House having jurisdiction can make their studies and reach any sound conclusion. Manifestly, if the requirement were not to operate until such studies have been completed and decisions arrived at, we would be merely confirming what we have done already, or what we are about to do.

The executive departments worked for more than 6 months preparing the budget estimates. The figures come to the Congress early in January. It is idle to believe that such a ceiling could be arrived at or could be maintained for the rest of the year in an era when almost every week is marked by some emergency requiring additional appropriations. It is a useless obstacle to the legislative process.

The Federal budget, Mr. Speaker, is not a national affair influenced by caprice or depending on the partisan policies of the party in power in the executive branch, but, on the contrary, is a documented volume of recommendations based largely on law previously enacted by the Congress to carry out Government policies inaugurated during the regimes of each political party.

The plan proposed by the Reorganization Act of determining in advance the fiscal requirements of the Government as a whole, and establishing a relationship between estimated revenues and expenditures is not new. It has been proposed many times, notably on February 28, 1913, when the inauguration of the budget system was under consideration, and again repeatedly in 1921, when the budget system was first adopted.

In each instance the House, after making every effort to incorporate the idea in a workable plan, found it impracticable. The inescapable difficulty is that it requires a report in the nature of a court verdict without considering the evidence. Long and detailed hearings are necessary before a figure can be accurately determined, and a figure arrived at by any other course is worthless and embarrasses the committee later in the session when justifiable reductions or warranted increases should be made in response to facts adduced in the hearings.

It is also an imposition on the public who are led to believe that the first figure announced is dependable. The man in the street gets the idea that the President's budget has been cut anywhere from $1,500,000,000 to $6,000,000,000 when a final tabulation at the close of the session may show that the budget has actually been increased. In other words, contrary to the general impression, no resolution under the Reorganization Act is binding on the committee or the Congress. No such resolution can establish any limitation on the Federal budget. Any such resolution is meaningless in effect and without force of law, misleading to the public, and imposes a duty on the Congress which—however laudable its objective—is impossible of attainment under the present law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for an additional 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BONNER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how much time has the gentleman consumed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed 60 minutes altogether.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I might say, of course, permission has already been given to the gentleman to extend his remarks and to have them appear in the RECORD as a continuation of the remarks he made earlier in the afternoon, so that to all intents and purposes this will constitute an extension beyond the 1 hour ordinarily permitted under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he is prepared at this time to yield for the purpose of a question.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; I shall be glad to yield at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is the gentleman prepared to yield for the purpose of a question at this time, if the additional time is granted?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for an additional 10 minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The question I should like to propound to the chairman of the committee is whether or not he proposes to do something about the situation with respect to the legislative budget ceiling?

Mr. CANNON. That is our purpose, Mr. Speaker, in asking for a suspension of the provision until we can make further studies.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Then the chairman expects to proceed with the consideration of a legislative budget ceiling resolution, under the terms of the existing House rules?

Mr. CANNON. Not if the concurrent resolution is agreed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. So that the Appropriations Committee and the members of the Ways and Means Committee will have to act on this joint committee and try to get out this report by the 15th of February, just as we struggled to do in the last 2 years?

Mr. CANNON. It is to be hoped that will not be necessary; as the gentleman is aware, in the last 2 years no advantage has accrued from the larger amount of time and money wasted on the legislative budget.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That may be, but the responsibility is on that committee to make a report. Whether or not the House acted upon it, the responsibility was on the joint budget committee to report a resolution by the 15th of February, and they did so.

Mr. CANNON. Not in the first session. They adopted a figure in the second session, and thereafter paid no attention to it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. My memory is that the resolution was prepared by the joint committee in both sessions and whether the House acted upon it or not was not in the control of the committee. Did not the House act upon the report in the second session?

Mr. CANNON. Without any hearings or any basis of fact.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Whether the House acted or not, was it not the responsibility of the joint legislative budget committee to submit a report by February 15 under the rules embodied in the so-called Legislative Reorganization Act?

It has always been my contention that that particular part of the Reorganization Act was an unrealistic and futile gesture. Even if the Congress adopted the report, a subsequent act could always, in effect, repeal any ceiling figure mentioned in the report.

Mr. CANNON. The figure considered was not supported by any data. All members of the subcommittee agreed that the plan was unworkable. The chairman of the joint committee, Mr. BRIDGES, so announced in the Senate.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. There is no argument between the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from South Dakota with respect to the practical difficulties of making any firm estimates before the 15th of February when the subcommittees have not had an opportunity to hold hearings. That is the point the gentleman has been making, and is well taken, but the basic question I am asking is whether or not as chairman of the Appropriations Committee in the Eighty-first Congress the gentleman from Missouri proposes to do anything about that in this year. I am sure that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] who was chairman of the committee in the Eightieth Congress also felt that the February 15 report was largely a futile thing but since it was the law and the first application of it, that it should be followed lest someone say it was not even tried.

Mr. CANNON. We propose to follow the law, but we trust that the House will agree to suspending that provision until we have had an opportunity to write a workable budget provision.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Suspending it in this session?

Mr. CANNON. Suspending it in this session.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. And will a resolution on that point come up in the near future?

Mr. CANNON. That depends on action by the committee.

Too frequently, Mr. Speaker, the fact is overlooked that we have a Budget and Accounting Act which became a law on June 10, 1921. It was the product of the best and most experienced minds on the subject at that time. It was framed by Members of this body with long experience and proven and recognized capacity. It was adequate to our purposes then and it is adequate today, but its provisions are effective only so far as Congress is concerned, only as Members individually and the committees having jurisdiction conscientiously and diligently discharge their obligations.

The budget before us is presented in consequence of that law.

It estimates over-all receipts for the ensuing fiscal year as $40,985,000,000.

It estimates expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year as $41,858,000,000.

And it proposes appropriations and authorizations for expenditure during the ensuing fiscal years of $34,000,000,000.

Instead of prejudging those amounts and substituting, without any sound basis for so doing, figures of our own as objectives, we should view them in their true light as recommendations to the Congress and approach them with a determination to improve each category to the extent the situation permits. It is not a guessing proposition. It is a task requiring diligence and application and business common sense. We can perform the task more efficiently, and certainly more expeditiously, if our time is not wasted in going through all the formalities leading up to and preparing a useless and meaningless legislative budget.

I have introduced today a concurrent resolution suspending the operation of that section of the Legislative Reorganization Act applying to the legislative budget pending further study. It is the quickest approach to waiving the requirement pending study of a better method and it is a course made permissive by the Legislative Reorganization Act itself. The Appropriations Committee should be permitted to proceed immediately with the examinations and studies it must conduct without being needlessly delayed by the ponderous and useless routine entailed by the legislative budget requirement.

I trust that the concurrent resolution may have the benefit of your thoughtful study and consideration.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he had introduced such a concurrent resolution?

Mr. CANNON. I have introduced such a concurrent resolution.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

What does the gentleman propose to do about the Appropriations Committee investigatory staff which was set up under the Reorganization Act? Of course, as the gentleman knows, we have had a staff which gave the Appropriations Committee much information, much assistance, and I am wondering just what the gentleman proposes to do with that staff.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with it. I initiated the system, and it operated for 3 years during my chairmanship of the committee very effectively. We expect to continue it.

Mr. JENSEN. In like manner as we now have it, a permanent staff of investigators, or how?

Mr. CANNON. I would expect it to operate with increasing efficiency. The details of it will be taken up when the committee is organized.

Mr. JENSEN. Does the gentleman mean he is going to borrow an employee from one department of the Government to investigate another department?

Mr. CANNON. It will be taken up with the Committee on Appropriations. What plan will be evolved I cannot say at this time. I am merely one member of a committee of 45 and am not in a position to say what the committee will do, but I will say that the matter will be submitted to the committee and the decision reached by the committee will be followed.

Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with matters of too serious import, too far-reaching world-wide importance, too fraught with the possibility of national catastrophe to afford the luxury of partisanship. The committee earnestly invites the counsel and cooperation of the membership of the House both in the formation of the bills reported in response to the budget recommendations, and in their consideration on the floor.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from the American Legion Magazine, notwithstanding the fact that the cost would exceed the amount allowed by $196.

Mr. CRAWFORD asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter from Mr. Biggers, of Texas.

Mr. FLOOD asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Standard Sentinel, of Hazleton, of January 7.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to yield back the time allowed me today under special order, and that I may be allowed to revise and extend my remarks and include a speech that I made on October 26 at Fond du Lac, Wis., in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TEAGUE (at the request of Mr. COOPER) was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

SECRETARY OF DEFENSE FORRESTAL

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks by way of a letter in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, there has recently emanated from some of our columnists and radio commentators considerable material with reference to the conduct of Secretary of Defense Forrestal. Some of those comments were of such drastic character that I considered it advisable to communicate with Secretary Forrestal on the subject, and attached hereto is a communication from Secretary Forrestal with relation to the topics above referred to, which is self-explanatory. I personally want to commend Secretary Forrestal for the splendid manner in which he is handling many difficult problems.

THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, January 11, 1949.

HON. HARRY SHEPPARD,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SHEPPARD: I have looked into the matters referred to in your telephone call of last week, and the only conclusion which I can draw is that the broadcast mentioned by your constituent appears to be an attempt to discredit the foreign policy of this Government.

The broadcast contained a statement to the effect that the administration was seeking power to "throw the country into war without even notifying the Congress." From other statements contained in the broadcast, it seems clear that this language has reference to proposed legislation which would set out in clear and simple terms the authority of the President, under certain circumstances directly involving our national security, to furnish military supplies to other countries.

As you know, the field of foreign policy is the responsibility of the President, and the President generally formulates policy in this field after seeking the advice of the Secretary of State. The National Military Establishment does not make foreign policy. The National Military Establishment is, however, one of the organizations which the President may, if he so desires, utilize in carrying out certain aspects of foreign policy. The occupation duties of the Army are an illustration.

In order that our foreign policy may be kept in balance with our military strength, Congress established the National Security Council, and gave the Council the duty of advising "the President with respect to the integration of domestic, foreign, and military policies relating to the national security so as to enable the military services and the other departments and agencies of the Government to cooperate more effectively in matters involving the national security."

In accordance with the congressional language just quoted, the National Security Council—with a membership including, among others, the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense—recently advised the President of the desirability of seeking the legislation referred to above. The President has approved this recommendation of the National Security Council.

In his budget message of January 3, President Truman discussed this matter as one of the most important items of his legislative and budget program, and said: "In existing circumstances, economic strength is not enough to assure continued independence to free people. Under the Charter of the United Nations, therefore, we have been discussing with some of the western European countries measures designed to increase the security of the North Atlantic area. To further this objective, I expect later to request funds for providing military supplies to those countries and to certain other countries where the provision of such assistance is important to our national security."

This same subject was discussed at some length in a State Department press release of December 29, a copy of which I attach. It was also discussed at pages 13 and 21 of my annual report (copy attached), as released to the press for use in morning newspapers of December 30.

The broadcast referred to by your constituent described this proposed legislation as a request for "the power * * * to throw the country into war without even notifying the Congress." In the light of the information set out above, I trust you will agree with me that there is no basis whatever for such an allegation with respect to the proposed legislation—which, of course, as the President has clearly stated, is being submitted by him to Congress for congressional consideration.

In the broadcast referred to by your constituent, a second matter—and one which has no relation whatever to the subject I have discussed above—was mentioned. This second matter appears to be a reference to an investment which I made 20 years ago in a Canadian company organized by me. This 1929 investment was made 11 years before I severed all my connections with the banking firm with which I was associated, in order to become an administrative assistant to President Roosevelt.

In 1933, when I was testifying before a committee of the United States Senate, I stated that the applicable tax laws of the United States and Canada had led me to make the investment. On this same occasion, I also testified that the total income taxes paid by me to the United States and the State of New York, for the year under discussion, were in excess of $300,000.

This particular hearing was a public hearing conducted by the Committee on Banking and Currency of the United States Senate, and the full text of the testimony is readily available to the public in a volume which can be identified as follows: Stock Exchange Practices, Hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency, United States Senate, Seventy-third Congress, second session, on Senate Resolution 84 (72d Cong.) and Senate Resolution 56 and Senate Resolution 97 (73d Cong.).

If I can be of any further assistance to you in connection with any inquiries you may have concerning the broadcast in question, please let me know.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES FORRESTAL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE BUDGET MESSAGE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the President has submitted a budget message, including the liquidating of contract authorizations, for the fiscal year 1950 of $41,572,000,000. Of this figure $3,036,000,000 is for the liquidation of contract authorizations. There may be additional requests if additional authorizations are passed by the Congress.

These figures are what we will have to work on and correspond with actual appropriations of $34,273,000,000 in the fiscal year 1949 which is now about one-half over, indicating a proposed increase in appropriations of upward of $7,000,000,000.

A tremendous increase is included in the estimates for national defense totalling $4,500,000,000. A very large portion of this increase, $3,100,000,000—is for the Air Force. A $750,000,000 increase for the Navy and a decrease of approximately $1,100,000,000 for the Army.

In arriving at these figures, with the exception of the Army and the veterans, almost every single unit of the Government shows an increase. It is going to be necessary for us to review these appropriations with the utmost care to see that we do not provide funds for projects or purposes which are not necessary and without which we could get along just as well. We must take cognizance of the facts just as far as we can and try to avoid permitting the waste of money.

The President has shown us on page M39 of his budget statement, why we should eliminate one item from the consideration by this Congress, wherein he states:

In the past 3 years housing construction has risen to the level it took 6 years to reach after World War I. Conversions of older houses have also increased the housing supply and extensive repairs and modernization have improved housing standards. As a result many of the most acute emergency needs, especially for veterans, have been met and the number of families compelled to live with others or to make other temporary arrangements has been reduced.

This indicates clearly that the housing situation has improved very markedly in the last 2 years without the Federal construction of houses and that it will continue to improve if we permit private industry to continue to function. It indicates that, in his own opinion, the situation will continue to improve and that the shortage will be entirely eliminated if we do not do foolish things which will stop private construction. Public construction of houses means priorities for Government construction and that means breaking down the possibility of private contractors securing the materials necessary to build. It is a study of all of the demands that are made upon us, and a careful analysis of all the legislation that is introduced and the most exacting examination of these things by the Appropriations Committee that will prevent wasteful operations on the part of the President.

The President has asked for an increase in the appropriations for the veterans' services and yet he estimates expenditures $464,000,000 below the amount of the appropriations. I believe that the President is very much mistaken in a great many of his requests and that the need is not going to materialize in the way that he anticipates and that we are going to be able to find ways to save large sums of money just as we have been able to do in the past.

I ask of the Congress the utmost of good faith in approaching this problem and that they realize that all of these governmental expenditures are inflationary and dangerous and that, if we provide funds that are not absolutely necessary for the conduct of the Government, we are betraying the trust that the people of the United States have placed in us.

In 1948 the President's estimate of receipts turned out to be many billions of dollars below what the actual receipts were. The present situation is that, so far this year, down to the last date available, the revenue receipts of the Government are about $200,000,000 above what they were last year. It is therefore at least reasonable to expect that the revenues will run $42,500,000,000 for the fiscal year 1949, after deducting the tax refunds. In 1950, if business conditions continue anywhere near as good as they are at the present, the revenue receipts should be as large—actually larger because revenue receipts have always increased after a tax reduction bill so that, unless the Congress fails in its responsibility to properly review the requests of the President and properly cut them down, we should have a surplus instead of a deficit for the next 2 years.

The Congress handicapped itself by adopting an amendment wiping out the power of the Rules Committee and making it mandatory on the part of the Speaker to recognize the chairman of any committee 21 days after a resolution had been introduced in the House for the consideration of a rule after a bill had been reported. This takes away the protection that the people have had for the past 100 years in the House of Representatives. It makes it possible for the regular committees of the House to be sure that if they report a bill it can be brought up for consideration. This sort of thing will result in much larger appropriation requirements and must larger expenditures out of the Federal Treasury, unless we have a greater sense of responsibility on the part of every committee in the House of Representatives.

This action was the most reactionary step that has been taken in the Congress in my day. It was a step which indicated that the majority of the House was careless of their responsibilities to the people of the United States. Bad results flowing from that situation can only be prevented by the most exacting and the most careful committee work on the part of the Members of the House.

I ask that a special effort be made by them to be sure that no bills are reported that call for the expenditure of public funds unless it is absolutely necessary. It is only by that sort of conduct and activity that we can meet our responsibility to the people of the United States.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROONEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances, in one to include an article from Pathfinder magazine and in the other an article from the Seafarer's Log.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after disposition of the legislative business and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, President Truman in his message on the state of the Union, as was expected, urged the adoption of a legislative program to perpetuate and to perfect the Socialist regime patterned after that of Stalin and Hitler, which was formally launched by his predecessor.

Among other things, he asked Congress to give him power to again subject our people to the torture of the OPA era, black markets, empty store shelves, to reline the streets with long queues anxiously and tiresomely inching their way to the counters for their daily allowances—price control and rationing.

To make political so-called loans to private industry.

To further socialize housing and thus add to the political corruption that so seriously afflicts the home-building industry—so-called low-rent housing, and so forth.

To continue and to strengthen the power of the political authority to liquidate owners of rental property and further aggravate the difficulty people are having to find a place in which to live—rent control.

To create the most fearful and the most avaricious bureaucracy of all, socialized medicine, and to engage in destroying the best medical care ever received by any people in the world.

To imitate the German Reich and other totalitarian states and bring the common school system under the juristion of the political authority controlling the Federal Government for the purpose of indoctrinating our youth with the philosophy of socialism, and, of course, to secure the political support of teachers—so-called Federal aid to education. It is a law, but with very few exceptions, that every dollar loaned or granted by the political authority, whether to private individuals or political bodies, carries with it a degree of political control, which control expands progressively as such loans or grants are repeated, all legal verbiage, or absence of such, to the contrary notwithstanding. The very existence of these devices is contingent upon the political dividends they pay.

To implement the available political means for maintaining the artificial prosperity the farming community is experiencing and to move it closer to the brink of liquidation and collective farming—political soil conservation, triple A, subsidies, Marshall plans, and so forth.

To fetter the expansion of and to destroy private electric energy producing and distributing plants, and to implement the program under way for ultimate socialization of the entire electric power industry, more TVA's, and so forth.

To exact in taxes for current operating costs from the low-income groups, in the guise of soaking the rich, about three and one-half billion dollars for an indefinite period of years, for that is about the proportion of the burden these classes will be forced to bear if the President's proposal to raise an additional $4,000,000,000 in taxes annually goes through.

To broaden the insidious income tax, disguised as social security, to cover some 20,000,000 additional workers to feed the insatiable maw of politics.

The incidence of taxation is such as to cause wage earners and the other low-income groups to pay the greater portion of taxes no matter upon whom or what they are levied. This is inherent in the very nature of things. Just as white sheep give more wool than black ones, because there are more white ones to fleece, so wage earners and working people in general pay in the aggregate more taxes than the rich and well-to-do. Taxes are ultimately paid out of production. One cannot eat or wear money but only the things that money will exchange for. Since the low-income groups produce and consume much the greater proportion of the necessaries of life and since general taxes ultimately and inevitably fall upon consumption goods, the real source of taxes must always remain predominately with those groups.

Banks, agriculture, railroads, coal mines, in fact all industry is well in the process of socialization. President Truman recommended to Congress that he be given power to authorize the construction of facilities to produce materials "in critically short supply, such as steel, if action by private industry fails to meet our needs." This is a bold and forthright request for power to formally put the political authority in the business of producing steel, which, in the nature of things, would have to eventuate in the complete communization of the entire steel industry.

And, finally, the President asked for over-all power to impose upon the Nation universal conscription, the essence of tyranny and the ultimate resort for making the regimentation complete and for maintaining a permanent status of war to keep a ravaged, disillusioned, and restive people from staging a successful revolution.

President Truman has heretofore himself stated the powers he asked Congress to give him represent police-state methods and inferentially condemned them. Now he seeks to impose them upon the Nation in perpetuity and even proceeds on the preposterous assumption that he was given a mandate to do so in the last election.

The result of last November's election shows nothing remotely resembling anything like an authorization to President Truman to continue or advance the program of communizing the United States.

Only about one-half of the eligible voters took the trouble to go to the polls. Though the population has greatly increased in the last decade, the total vote cast in the Presidential election in 1940 was about 2,000,000 greater than that of the last election. Why? Because a great number of those who still believe in freedom and constitutional government of strictly limited powers, the kind of government under which this Nation achieved its greatness, viewed the platforms of the two major parties, and the conduct of party leaderships during the last decade or so, as being so completely and so similarly socialistic that there was no choice left to them but to stay home.

Furthermore, millions who did take the trouble to go to the polls, whether they voted the Democratic or Republican ticket, did so with decided reservations, lacking faith that either party would do the right things instead of the politically expedient ones.

And by no means of least importance is the fact that millions voted outright for New Dealism not knowing its implications or realizing that it is leading this Nation into universal slavery, and, perchance, even to domination by some foreign power, as surely and as straight as the crow flies.

There is nothing whatever in the situation warranting the claim that the election gave President Truman a mandate to do anything. Only if, on the one hand, the voters had had a clear-cut choice of voting for the existing political system which is based wholly on plundering the producing elements of the population, and, on the other hand, for true government as expressed by Jefferson, one that "shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned," and President Truman had won out, then, but only then, could it be claimed that he was given a mandate to perfect the police state. But the voters had no such choice which completely exposes the pretension of any mandate.

The attitude of the electorate in respect of the several factions contending with each other for control of the Government and the election results clearly and unmistakably show dangerous political corruption of our national life. It is to this that we must look for an explanation of the true meaning of the recent election.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio something about this low-cost housing he was talking about. Would the gentleman tell me and the rest of the Members of the House what low-cost housing is?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman from Ohio has so often expressed himself on that point to the Members that, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit, he prefers not to discuss it at the moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BONNER.) Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD—DANGER SIGNALS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, this morning's press contains some danger signals. I wonder if they are caused by the Federal Reserve Board's policy, which is squeezing credit through Regulation W, or by causing the commercial banks to reduce their loans, or both.

GOOD WAGES AND FAIR PRICES

We are on a very high plateau in this country. We are on the plateau of a $250,000,000,000 national debt, jet propulsion and atomic energy. The only way we can pay off this national debt is with a high national income. There is only one way we can have a high national income, and that is through good wages and fair prices.

There is no other way that we can pay the debt. Therefore we must not go back to "horse and buggy" days or the ox-cart days, insofar as our national economy is concerned.

SLUMP IN LOANS

On the front page of the Washington Post this morning there is a headline, "Sharp drop in business loans laid to healthy inventory cut." This article discloses that there was a spectacular $195,000,000 slump in farm and trade loans for the week ending January 5, but the Federal Reserve authorities consider it healthy. I wonder if it is healthy. I also wonder if it is a No. 1 danger signal that the Federal Reserve Board should recognize instead of trying to apologize for, or try to explain. The same article indicates that the banks increased their holdings of Government securities especially reflecting sharp increases in holdings of 1-year and 90-day securities. Does this mean that loans for production and distribution are cut down and the lack of earnings made up through purchases of Government bonds and securities?

BROAD POWERS

It is all right for the Federal Reserve Board to have broad powers, if they are exercised discreetly. But I doubt that they are being used discreetly. The people believe that the Federal Reserve Board caused the depression of 1920. Many of them also believe that the Board contributed to the depression in 1929 to 1932. Many of us believe that the Board almost caused another devastating depression in 1937 by doubling the reserve requirements or raising the reserve requirements of banks 100 percent. One more depression caused by the Federal Reserve Board and I predict that that will very likely be the end of the Federal Reserve Board.

Possibly consideration should not be given to require certain powers to be exercised by the Federal Reserve Board, only in collaboration with the United States Treasury Department. This morning's press also carries the following danger signals: "Hundreds of laid-off workers flocked to the offices of the Maryland Employment Security Department for compensation checks last week."

Maryland paid out $443,342 in unemployment benefits last week to 22,768 claimants. In the corresponding week a year ago, the sum of $139,000 was paid to 7,571 claimants. The number of applicants has more than doubled in the past 3 weeks.

Unemployment in New York State at the end of 1948 was about 40 percent higher than a year ago. It is reported in the morning press that that represents an increase of 65 percent in the past 3 months. The Bankers Trust Co. declares in its annual report issued yesterday that the firmer money policy of the monetary authorities helped to restrict credit expansion. What does this mean? Does this mean that the monetary authorities have sent word down to the commercial banks that they must not make so many loans?

It has always been insisted by financial experts that a little inflation is impossible. In other words, we have always been told that you cannot control it, that there is no way to keep it under control and that a little inflation must not be permitted. I wonder if a little deflation is likely to be equally devastating to our country. If you cannot control inflation, can you control deflation, and should we take drastic steps toward either inflation or deflation?

The Federal Reserve Board's record of becoming very active to deflate and never seemingly greatly concerned about increasing the ability of the people to consume is very disturbing to me. Another thing very disturbing to me is a report coming directly from a board member, from a member of the Federal Reserve Board, that a recession is long past due, and the earlier we have it the better off our country will be. In other words, the quicker the better. Is the Federal Reserve Board advocating and trying to cause a recession? I would like to know. Many of the steps they have taken and which they are now taking are steps in that direction. I hope they give careful consideration to withdrawing some of the drastic provisions they have put into effect affecting our economy to the extent that we now have a considerable credit squeeze.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. It seems to me that if the powers that be in the Administration would try to keep this country on an even keel, on a balanced budget, instead of trying to spend eight hundred and thirty-five million more than we are going to take in, if they would stop this squandering of money they would not need to issue such orders. You cannot spend yourself into prosperity and ever balance the budget.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] told us a while ago we are going to have a surplus. I am in favor of a balanced budget. I would be in favor of raising taxes in order to balance the budget. I do not want deficit financing. That is the reason why I voted twice last year against the tax-reduction bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is discussing one of the most important subjects that will confront this Congress. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. One way to prevent ruinous inflation and ruinous deflation would be the passage of a law fixing a limit beyond which Federal Reserve banks could not inflate or below which they could not deflate. You would have no trouble in stopping inflation. When they started to deflate you should provide that the Treasury Department should issue United States notes, with gold reserves behind them, to take the place of the Federal Reserve notes that are being retired, and in that way stabilize the currency, and let the American people know what they can depend upon, and prevent the disasters that were brought on in 1921 and 1929.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman to ask a question.

Mr. RICH. Where has the Federal Reserve or the Federal Government retired any of its indebtedness? No such thing has happened.

Mr. PATMAN. We retired $20,000,000,000 in the last year or two.

Mr. RICH. Oh, they took some notes that are coming due and they supplanted them with something else, but they are not retiring any debt. They are selling more bonds all the time.

Mr. PATMAN. Oh, no. The national debt was over $270,000,000,000 and now it is $250,000,000,000.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. If we let these Federal Reserve banks deflate the currency below the danger point, we never will pay our national debt. We must stabilize the currency within a given limit, or we are headed for disaster.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. You have been headed that way for 15 years.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, that sounds like campaign talk.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I would like to get one thing in my mind.

Mr. PATMAN. If the gentleman will ask his question, I shall be glad to try to answer it.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes. I am not going to make any speech. I understood you were against the Federal Reserve System——

Mr. PATMAN. No. I am not against the Federal Reserve System. I am for the Federal Reserve System, properly operated. I am objecting to what the Federal Reserve Board has done.

Mr. NICHOLSON. What I want to bring out is, if I can, that because of laws passed in the Congress, the Federal agency had to go along with them.

Mr. PATMAN. The law did not specify how a regulation should be administered. It is not the duty of Congress to do that. It is now within the power of the Federal Reserve Board to change, for instance, regulation W; and I am insisting that they should liberalize regulation W.

Mr. NICHOLSON. May I tell the gentleman from Texas, although I am a new Member and he is an old Member here, that we in the Congress tell the Board what they can charge for interest, and so forth, and so on?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; we have passed a law about savings deposits, that the Federal Reserve Board can fix the amount of interest to be paid on savings deposits in certain banks; and we made it an absolute violation of the law for interest to be paid on demand deposits.

Mr. NICHOLSON. But the Committee on Banking and Currency can bring in a bill here and say what the Federal Reserve Board shall do. Is not that so?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; we could bring in a bill like that; but I regret that the people who administer these laws will not administer them in a way that the economy of the Nation will not be harmed or injured. That is what I am talking about, that they are not properly administering the laws of this Government—that is, according to my notion.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. It is a well-known fact, as any first-class economist will tell you, that prices in a free economy, such as ours is supposed to be, are governed by two things, the volume of the nation's currency multiplied by the velocity of its circulation. For that reason I have insisted that the Banking and Currency Committee bring in a bill to stabilize the currency at a given limit. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas if he agrees with me on that proposition.

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; generally, I do. I do not of course agree on the volume of actual currency multiplied by velocity, for I maintain that in currency must be included bank deposits and things of that kind that can be converted.

Mr. RANKIN. Things that grow out of the volume of currency.

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; we will agree on that generally; yes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is it not a fact that you have been printing money for the last 15 years at the rate of about three or four tons a day?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. RICH. And the Treasurer of the United States says that he has printed more money in the last 15 years than any other Treasurer who has ever been in the Treasury Department; and he goes on to say further that it is worth less.

Mr. PATMAN. I presume the gentleman is proud of that because we could not do business in this country without money. Money as the gentleman knows is being mutilated and made unusable every day, that is being worn out at the rate of 3 or 4 tons a day.

Mr. RICH. The Secretary of the Treasury is a Democrat, from St. Louis. He is a pretty good fellow. He does not agree in the printing of all this money.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman certainly could not stop it. We have got to have money to do business. We cannot go back to the old barter system, trading a couple of hogs for a horse, and and vice versa.

Mr. RICH. But if you keep printing it, it will be just like the German mark which once was worth 24 cents but which finally got so cheap you could go out and get it off the dump for nothing. That is what is going to happen to our own money if we do not stop the printing presses.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not think we are coming to any such situation as that.

Mr. RICH. That is the road we are on.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Does not the gentleman agree that there should be a limit to the amount of currency that can be in circulation at any one time, that there should be a ceiling above which it cannot rise and a floor below which it cannot fall? If we had such a system we could have prosperity in this country for the next hundred years. But if we do not, we will never know from one year to another where we stand.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not think we could make a feasible plan limiting the amount of actual money in circulation for the reason that it varies with the people's demand for their money in their bank deposits. You cannot control the demand of the people. Sometimes they want actual money, at other times things that money will buy.

Mr. RANKIN. But you can establish limits beyond which it cannot go and below which it cannot fall and keep the currency in circulation within a reasonable limit.

Mr. PATMAN. If that were possible I surely would like to see it done. If the gentleman's theory is the answer I certainly would like to see it in operation. I will give it further consideration.

Mr. RANKIN. By having a ceiling above which it cannot rise you stop runaway inflation, and by having a floor below which it cannot fall you prevent disastrous deflation and perpetuate the prosperity we now have.

Mr. PATMAN. We could have another $60,000,000,000 in the circulation today if the people just demanded it.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman mean $60,000,000,000?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; or up to the limit of the deposits in banks; probably more.

Mr. RICH. If that should happen your money would not be worth anything.

Mr. PATMAN. It would be worth just as much as it is worth now; as it would be the same kind of money. It is used as money now by giving checks on banks.

Mr. RICH. That is what Hitler did over in Germany. Do you want that to happen here?

Mr. PATMAN. I suggest the gentleman ought to give a little more consideration to the question and he will not likely have that opinion.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Massachusetts tell us what the program will be next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. On Monday there will be three suspensions. There will be a resolution in relation to tickets for the various inaugural activities which at prior inaugurals has been passed. There is also a Presidential salary bill which, I understand, is being considered by the Senate now. There is another resolution providing for a 2-day holiday on January 20 and 21 for Federal employees in the District of Columbia only. That bill is also up for consideration in the Senate and, if passed, will be considered under suspension of the rules on Monday.

For the rest of the week I know of no legislation that will come up but, always keeping faith with the House, I would like it understood that if anything should arise I may have a little flexibility in action so far as any matter of importance which we feel should come up, and then only by and through the consent of the leadership on the minority side. Those things are very carefully canvassed. It is not a question of my calling up anything. It has to go through the regular procedure and secure the consent of the leadership on your side.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is it to be understood that the bill dealing with increases if brought up under suspension will deal only with the emoluments of the Presidential office?

Mr. McCORMACK. The President, the Vice President, and the Speaker, according to my understanding. I may say that that is the only extent to which the leadership would permit any bill or any resolution to come up. It would have to be confined to those three officers. The others can wait, and I say that without in any way indicating that I am prejudiced to any part of a broader bill. However, this bill will be confined to the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am glad to have the distinguished majority leader make that clear, because if the matter is to come up under suspension of the rules it is proper that the Members know the scope of the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, if we could get it through by unanimous consent, that would be much better. I may say that the President pays an income tax on his salary and any increase in his salary would be subject to a tax.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Would the majority leader be in position to advise the membership at this time with respect to any plans for the election of Members to the various committees? Would that come up next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. Of course, that is a matter for each side to determine. On the majority side we expect to hold a caucus on either Monday or Tuesday. That has not been definitely decided. It will be very shortly, however. The Democratic committee on committees will make its report to the caucus, then, of course, presentation of a resolution to the House for its action takes place immediately. It is a matter also of your committee on committees to bring it up through your processes, your conferences, by making a report. So that ought to be done the early part of next week.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Would the gentleman state whether or not it would be the plan to have the House in session on Tuesday or Wednesday to consider nominations to the various committees?

Mr. McCORMACK. If the situation arises, that could be done. I would not want to commit myself, because that is a matter for conference with the leaders on both sides, depending on what the situation is. I think that if both parties were in position to organize their committees on Tuesday, we ought to meet and organize them and get the committees going.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It is your responsibility under the rules of the House to present a resolution or report relating to the legislative budget, because it cannot get to work until those committees have been designated.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is true.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I withdrew my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the majority leader if he can tell us what the salary bill is going to be that is coming in?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will be frank with the gentleman. My understanding is that the increase will be from $75,000 to $100,000 a year, and that the expense account will be increased to $50,000. I do not know definitely now whether it is $20,000 or $30,000, but to increase it to $50,000.

Mr. RICH. The President now gets $40,000 expense account, does he not?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not know; I will be frank. As I understand, we increase it to $50,000.

Mr. RICH. You are going to increase it to $50,000, and with the $40,000 he gets now, that would be $90,000 that he would not have to account for. Now, what I would suggest to do, to be right between man and man and between the taxpayers of the country, would be that you give the President $200,000 and eliminate the $50,000 expense money. I would vote for that, but I will not let unanimous consent come in here for $50,000 exemption, because the President is now squandering the taxpayer's money, and he ought to pay taxes just like anybody else.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls for the regular order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes on the rules governing Members on this floor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] is recognized for 40 minutes.

AIR POWER AND THE FISCAL YEAR 1950 BUDGET OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, the budget for 1950 has again brought to the forefront the question of the preservation of American leadership in the air. Those of us who have served in the Seventy-ninth and Eightieth Congresses are rather familiar with air-power problems because of a number of basic studies and surveys concluded during the lives of those Congresses by distinguished, impartial survey groups.

However, there are some 110 Members of this Congress who did not have an opportunity to study those surveys and findings about the condition of American air power. For their benefit and because of the importance of the issues raised by the budget message, I am going to review some of the background that led to the creation of the distinguished survey groups. I will also summarize some of the findings reported by these groups which bear directly upon the budget problem.

At the very outset I would like to emphasize something which I think the President's budget message also concedes, namely, that air power has now become our first line of defense. These are indeed critical times in international relations during which it would be the height of folly to fail to take the action required to insure our air power leadership.

THE POSTWAR DISINTEGRATION

It is difficult for anyone not actually a student of the problem to recollect or understand the extent of the disintegration of our military power following VJ-day. At the end of the war we possessed an aerial strength the like of which had never before been imagined. The Air Force was operating 243 air groups. Production of aircraft had soared to an annual rate of more than 100,000 planes a year. Our aircraft production was easily more than double the production of any other nation in the world. Our air power literally battered into rubble enemy defenses that had been considered almost impregnable and made possible a frontal assault by land and sea forces that forced final capitulation.

But pell-mell demobilization scattered all this strength to the four winds. Our Air Force plummeted down to a condition where it could scarcely muster 15 adequately equipped groups. Only three were rated "combat ready." Production of aircraft tobogganed to only 1,300 military planes in the entire calendar year 1946—the equivalent of only a couple of days' production at the peak rate of March 1945. Even with the few planes it was operating, the Air Force experienced severe difficulties and its accident rate soared for lack of adequate maintenance.

With the sharp cut-backs and cancellations, conditions in the aircraft industry were even more alarming. Almost every company plunged into the red in 1946 and the losses began to mount more sharply in 1947. Efforts to get enough commercial business to keep the invaluable teams of engineers, designers, and production technicians together were unavailing, and even compounded the losses. By the late spring of 1947 the very survival of an aircraft-manufacturing industry worthy of the name was in serious question.

CRITICAL IMPORTANCE OF THE INDUSTRY

To those who have not had the opportunity of making a study of modern national-defense requirements, the question could well be raised why there is any concern about the financial status or the well-being of the aircraft-manufacturing industry. The answer lies in some relatively simple facts. First, the aircraft industry is a specialized industry because of its very highly technological aspects. You cannot transform a household-appliance or automobile plant into the manufacture of aircraft, and experience has shown that neither can an aircraft company be transformed successfully into the business of manufacturing household appliances or automobiles. An aircraft company is in the business of research, design, testing, and manufacture of airplanes, or it is not in business.

Furthermore, an aircraft company is composed of highly trained specialists—from the president on down through the research and engineering departments, the production departments, to the last man on the production line, the field employees, and the test pilots. It took an almost superhuman effort to expand the aircraft industry to the peak production mark made in March 1945 from a relatively small and inconsequential industry in 1938. I may say to you with perfect confidence that if it had not been for British orders placed in 1938, along with British capital supplied for plant expansion, that President Roosevelt's then well-nigh fantastic production demand, made in 1940, of 50,000-plane production per year could not have been achieved, and quite probably that the war could not have been won in 1945.

No nation can afford to maintain a standing army, a standing navy, or air force in sufficient readiness to engage in all-out combat at a moment's notice, as that would require a tremendous reserve not only of men but of continuously modernized matériel. That reserve in storage would be necessary in order to meet the rapid attrition of matériel which would begin to occur at the very onset of war. Instead mobilization plans must be prepared which will permit the most rapid mobilization of the manpower, the plant capacity, and the equipment needed to prosecute a war when and if war comes. Under modern conditions the principal delaying factor in mobilization is always equipment and seldom manpower. This is more true in the field of aviation than in any of the others because of the time required to design, develop, accumulate parts and instruments, and then build airplanes.

The principal components of an aircraft-manufacturing company are a design team and a production team. It takes a long time to build a design team, a team of competent research men, engineers, draftsmen, and other technicians, and it takes a long time to develop a competent team of skilled production workers. The very existence of these design and production teams in a state of readiness to expand is an important aspect of the national security.

Consequently, it is of the highest importance to the national security that our Nation maintain at all times an aircraft industry capable of fulfilling its function in the national defense. The President of the United States stated this on August 8, 1945, when he said:

> It is vital to the welfare of our people that this Nation maintain developmental work and the nucleus of a producing aircraft industry capable of rapid expansion to keep the peace and meet any emergency.

Actually, under current conditions the demands upon the aircraft industry are considerably less than would appear on the surface. This is because our air forces, both naval aviation and the United States Air Force, are living off the fat of surplus planes left over from the war. For example, in the fiscal year 1948 the two air forces withdrew from war-storage surplus a total of 43,000,000 air-frame pounds. The total thus withdrawn from surplus and placed into service in that year was more than double the total weight of new aircraft purchased.

In simpler terms, while the naval air arm and the Air Force put into service in the fiscal year 1948 airplanes whose air frame weighed approximately 64,000,000 pounds, 43,000,000 pounds came out of storage—World War II surplus aircraft—and the balance, less than 21,000,000 pounds, was from new modern production. To put it another way, better than two-thirds of the airplanes that went into service in the fiscal year 1948 were obsolete World War II stocks from surplus and the balance of less than one-third were modern aircraft.

But the surplus of World War II aircraft in storage will soon be exhausted. Where, then, will we obtain the production of aircraft to maintain even the 1948 rate of input of new aircraft into the armed services. It must come from new production, of course. Now, I want to give you some startling figures. Ordinarily, it takes a year and a half from the day the orders are issued to double the production of an aircraft factory. If, when that order is given, it is not merely to double production but to go all-out as did President Roosevelt in his orders of 1940, then the experience of that time indicates that to double the production again requires about half the length of time of the first doubling, and then to double it again requires a little more than half of that time, and so on until you reach your maximum potential output. The important point here is that you can achieve top speed much sooner from a running start than you can from a standing start.

The Air Coordinating Committee, the President's Air Policy Commission, and the Congressional Aviation Policy Board all realized those facts. They saw that World War II surplus storage aircraft were soon to be exhausted and that it was necessary to start more than 2 years in advance of exhaustion of storage to build the production industry to the point where it could carry the load of an annual input of new airplanes into the armed services at even the 1948 rate of 64,000,000 air-frame pounds per year. That is why we in the Congress in 1948 voted the appropriations necessary and the authorizations necessary to build the aircraft production industry to meet the requirements that we knew full well must be met in a few years.

Toward the close of my remarks I will insert a table showing the recommendations for minimum annual procurement of military aircraft, but at this point I shall present certain of those figures.

In 1945 the Air Coordinating Committee recommended that the minimum production rate of aircraft needed to "cooperate in maintenance of world peace" is 60,000,000 pounds of air frame per annum. On January 1, 1948, the President's Air Policy Commission recommended that the production rate for the calendar year 1949 be expanded to 56,000,000 pounds of air frame. On March 1, 1948, the Congressional Aviation Policy Board said that "the strength necessary to prevent the loss of a war" required an annual production rate of not less than 63,000,000 air-frame pounds per annum and that "the initial strength to mount promptly a successful air offensive" requires a production rate of 111,000,000 pounds of air frame per annum. A Stanford University survey—as quoted by the Associated Press in 1948—stated that the minimum annual production rate necessary to provide a base for expansion is 80,000,000 pounds of air frame per annum.

It is my belief that in the fiscal year 1949, while the figures are not available, that the same situation as existed in 1948 is continuing; that is, withdrawals from war-surplus storage by far exceed the new planes purchased. By this process we are, of course, eating up our stored war-surplus aircraft very rapidly. It is admitted that by the end of the next fiscal year our surplus of usable planes will be exhausted and we can only turn to new production for replacement of normal attrition losses and for modernization of our air groups.

With the available supply even of obsolete planes thus being used up, the vital necessity of not allowing our aircraft industry to disintegrate and disappear should be apparent—especially in view of the critical international situation.

SURVEYS AUTHORIZED

The history of the official surveys to which I have referred should perhaps be detailed at least in brief as follows:

Concern over the air-power situation increased in 1947 and Members of Congress and of the administration began to consider methods of developing a remedy. Legislation was introduced in both Houses of Congress to provide for comprehensive and exhaustive surveys of air-power problems and to make remedial recommendations.

The official Air Coordinating Committee had been studying the problem for 2 years, ever since their report on demobilization of the industry was published in 1945. In the late spring of 1947 that committee urged the President of the United States to set up a commission something like the famed Morrow Board of 1925 to study the problem.

Such a group was established in the executive branch of the Government by President Truman on July 17, 1947. This was the President's Temporary National Air Policy Commission, of which the chairman was the eminent Thomas K. Finletter. The other members, none of whom were connected with the services or the aircraft industry, were persons who have made notable contributions of disinterested public service to the country. They were: George P. Baker, the vice chairman; James J. Hill, professor of transportation at the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration; Palmer Hoyt, publisher of the Denver Post; John A. McCone, president, Joshua Hendy Corp., Los Angeles, Calif.; and Arthur D. Whiteside, president of Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. All had long records of service in various Government positions and were in a position to make an analytical study of the situation. The report of this Commission, Survival in the Air Age, graphically expressed the concern the Commission felt at the then low ebb of the Air Forces, the naval air arm, and the aircraft industry.

Almost simultaneously the Congress established the Congressional Aviation Policy Board, which was equipped with almost identical instructions to survey the whole field of air power and come back to the Congress with remedial recommendations.

The members of this board were Senators OWEN BREWSTER, of Maine; ALBERT W. HAWKES, of New Jersey; HOMER E. CAPEHART, of Indiana; EDWIN C. JOHNSON, of Colorado; and ERNEST W. MCFARLAND, of Arizona; Representatives CARL HINSHAW, of California, vice chairman; CHARLES A. WOLVERTON, of New Jersey; KARL STEFAN, of Nebraska; ALFRED L. BULWINKLE, of North Carolina; and PAUL J. KILDAY, of Texas.

In addition, the congressional board had the benefit of the advice and experience of outstanding leaders in American aviation, who served as members of the board's council. Serving as adviser to the board was Merrill C. Meigs, Director of the Aircraft Division of the War Production Board from 1940 to 1942, during the critical period in which production was being built toward war-needed goals. Among those who served as members of the council were such distinguished citizens as General of the Army H. H. Arnold; Admiral John H. Towers; William A. M. Burden, former Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Air; Richard R. Deupree, president of Procter & Gamble and Chief of the Munitions Board in 1946–47; Lt. Gen. James H. Doolittle; Joseph D. Keenan, noted labor attorney; Dr. Clark M. Millikan, professor of aeronautics, California Institute of Technology; L. Welch Pogue, former Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board; Charles E. Sorenson, vice chairman, Willys-Overland Motors, Inc., adviser, aircraft production, War Production Board, 1942; Col. Roscoe Turner; and Gill Robb Wilson. These and other distinguished citizens participated in the studies undertaken by the four subcommittees of the board.

The President's Commission held both open and closed hearings to obtain the voluminous information required for its conclusions. Its members sat almost constantly from the time of appointment until the report was submitted on January 1, 1948. The congressional board, taking advantage of the spadework accomplished by the painstaking work of the President's Commission, analyzed this testimony and then sought its own conclusions and verifications in independent investigation and in closed hearings with the Nation's top aviation authorities. Its report was made to the Congress on March 1, 1948—Senate Report 949, Eightieth Congress.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I will be glad to yield to my distinguished friend from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. I cannot refrain from congratulating the distinguished gentleman from California for the very excellent and timely statement he is making to the House at this time. I trust that every Member of this body will carefully read the speech that the gentleman is delivering and that the Congress will take appropriate action and that regardless of politics, Members on both sides of the aisle will vote for the 70-group air force for our national security.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman is very kind in his remarks.

Mr. SHORT. The gentleman from California has made an exhaustive and extensive study of this subject over a period of many years, and I know of no one in Congress or out of Congress who is better qualified or more competent to speak with intelligence and authority than the able gentleman who is now addressing the House.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman from California is embarrassed by the expressions of the gentleman from Missouri.

PARALLEL RECOMMENDATIONS

It is highly significant that these two bodies, working in coordination, but making their own independent investigations for the executive and legislative branches of the National Government, presented recommendations that virtually parallel themselves in the all-important field of military security.

Both recommended urgent attention to rebuilding the air forces and the naval air arm to the strengths of 70 groups for the Air Force and 14,500 planes for the naval air arm. Both issued sharp warnings that the air forces, the naval air arm, and the aircraft industry, upon which the country must depend in an emergency, were woefully short of meeting the elementary demands of our security.

The President's Commission reported that—

It is the overwhelming view of those most qualified to know that the country must have a new strategic concept for its defense and that the core of this concept is air power.

The conclusions of the Commission thus fix as the target date by which we should have an air arm in being capable of dealing with a possible atomic attack on this country at January 1, 1953. For convenience we will refer to this date as A-day.

We believe that A-day divides the future into two clear phases for strategic purposes. The first phase is that which begins now and extends to A-day. We call this phase I. The second phase is that which will exist on and after A-day. We call this phase II.

SEVENTY-GROUP AIR OFFENSIVE

The congressional board examined the requirements for security and detailed the situation as follows:

PLAN A

From the information made available to the board by the Air Force and by the Navy separately, it would appear that the initial strength necessary to mount promptly an effective, continuing, and successful air offensive against a major enemy, is what is termed the Air Force 70-group program of 20,541 aircraft, plus the Navy program of 14,500 aircraft, total 35,041 aircraft. At the level-off period in 1953 these programs would require thereafter an annual Air Force procurement of 86,000,000 air-frame pounds and an annual Navy procurement of 25,000,000 air-frame pounds—total 111,000,000 air-frame pounds annually.

PLAN B

Based on the same sources of information, the strength necessary to prevent the loss of a war upon the outset of hostilities appears to be the same program outlined in plan A above, but without reserve aircraft, which means a combined Air Force and Navy aviation procurement of 63,000,000 air-frame pounds annually. For the purpose of comparative budget study we have assumed that the combined annual procurement of 63,000,000 pounds might be divided into approximately 45,000,000 for the Air Force and 18,000,000 for the Navy. This plan is designed to provide a force sufficient to (a) withstand an initial blow intended to cripple the United States, (b) form the basis for a strong Territorial defense, and (c) provide effective retaliation, but not a sustained offensive action. Under this plan it is estimated that the aircraft manufacturing industry would require a year longer to reach the volume of aircraft production necessary to cope with attrition, than it would under plan A.

COMMERCIAL AIR TRANSPORT AND NATIONAL SECURITY

A highly significant topic on which both the President's commission and the congressional board are in general agreement was their recognition of the importance of commercial air transport as an auxiliary of the national defense. Our congressional board said:

Civil and military aviation are indivisible in assessing total American air strength. The air transport industry of the United States and the military air arms must fit into a single pattern.

Both groups as a result were in agreement upon the need of immediate adoption of and support for a program to encourage all-weather flying. There had been developed almost simultaneously with the report of the congressional board a comprehensive program of navigational aids which was calculated to bring an immediate improvement in the regularity of air schedules, and after a period of 10 years to insure almost 100 percent schedule reliability. The importance of such a system of navigational aids to the military air arm should be obvious. Without it the commercial air lines cannot develop into the healthy auxiliary required for the logistics of modern warfare. This plan is known as RTCA Report SC-31-3.

I am glad to see the new budget recognized the value of this program.

Both the congressional board and the Finletter commission also recognized the imperative need of providing modern up-to-date transports for the military services. Testimony presented to both indicated that the armed services required a larger number of modern cargo and passenger air carriers than they were able to order out of current procurement funds.

Actually, last year, when Congress was considering the appropriation measure to provide the first year of a 5-year plan of procurement for the 70-group air force and for naval aviation, it was proposed to add the sum of $922,000,000 to the measure as received from the defense establishment. This sum included $100,000,000 for the provision of new and modern transport aircraft for the armed services.

Unfortunately during consideration of this measure, $100,000,000 was eliminated from the appropriation and the Air Force wiped out the provision for new transport planes to that extent.

LESSON OF THE AIR LIFT

While the congressional board and the Finletter commission emphasized the important role of air transport in modern warfare it must be conceded they did not anticipate that their observations and recommendations were to be so dramatically confirmed in a few short months by the Berlin air lift. I believe the story of the air lift is familiar to all the Members of the Congress and I will not go into it now. It does demonstrate dramatically and indelibly the need for prompt action to restore the transport arm of the armed services to its highest efficiency. The already inadequate transport equipment available is being worn out in the Berlin operation far more rapidly than had been anticipated. I am glad to note that the Air Force has already recognized the situation by announcing recently an order for 27 additional Boeing Stratofreighters, which according to news reports are being paid for out of appropriations previously allocated to tooling for aircraft production.

It is my hope that the Air Force will take further action to remedy the situation and will come to the Congress and ask now that the $100,000,000 taken out of last year's appropriation measure be restored immediately to purchase badly needed transport planes. This $100,000,000 should be requested in the form of a deficiency appropriation so as to enable the placing of orders in the near future instead of late next summer, when funds for the next fiscal year become available. If we do not provide for the transports by a deficiency appropriation, the production lines for transport planes may shut down and tooling be scrapped before action can be taken to order the necessary transports.

THE IMPACT OF THE BUDGET

In this connection, Members of the Congress should be aware that the procurement of new transport airplanes takes longer than may be thought. Production of transport airplanes today is tion, there are shortages in production of materials and almost no sustaining orders from commercial air lines to keep production lines moving smoothly and consistently. It will take many, many months from the time of order by the Air Force before many transports would be available for actual use.

In order that the pipe line of transport aircraft production might flow properly and produce the airplanes needed when they are needed, it is necessary that the start of that pipe-line flow be made now, immediately.

Just a few days ago, it came to light that the first impact of the President's budget for the Air Force has caused a cancellation of production orders for several new and advanced types of military aircraft. To me and to you, I believe, these cancellations are a crying shame. The very cancellation of these orders for new and advanced types of aircraft with longer range and higher speed may of itself lend encouragement to predatory foreign forces. As one member of this distinguished body responsible as it is to the American people for supplying the needs to maintain the peace, I am heartsick at the news.

I have reviewed at some length the conditions that led to the establishment of the congressional board and the Finletter commission mainly to show you that the 5-year program presented to the Congress last year is supported by an impressive amount of evidence. Adoption of such a program had been recommended by every impartial group that had studied the subject from 1945 on. The Congress last year passed the first year's appropriation for the 5-year program by such overwhelming margins as to constitute virtual unanimity.

In the face of this record it is almost unbelievable that the budget presented to the Congress this week completely disregards all of the study that had been given to the problem and ruthlessly scraps without question the 5-year program for restoration of American air power. I find nowhere in the message any assurance that would give reason for abandoning the 70-group air force or for scrapping the 5-year modernization program. The consequence of the action taken is admitted, however, on page M25 when the message admits that procurement will have to be increased in future years because of the curtailment now projected.

This paragraph in the budget very frankly admits we are living off our fat when it says:

> Aircraft from wartime reserves will continue to meet a part of the replacement requirements in fiscal year 1950. In subsequent years, when these reserves are depleted, an increase in aircraft procurement may be required if the strength and structure of the Air Force and naval aviation are to be maintained at the level and replacement rates contemplated in this budget.

The budget provision for aircraft procurement not only disregards entirely the program initiated last year but also makes provision for procurement far below any level recommended as the very minimum requirement by the groups that have studied the question. The budget states that the procurement provided by the recommended appropriation will be 34,000,000 pounds. I present below a table showing the recommendations of the various groups that have surveyed the subject. None considered that it was safe at present to maintain a procurement lower than 56,000,000 pounds, while the most recent and most authoritative report recommends a minimum of 80,000,000 pounds. The recommendations are as follows:

| | Pounds |
|---|---|
| 1. Air Coordinating Committee, 1945: | |
| Minimum after world peace is well assured | 30,000,000 |
| Minimum to cooperate in maintenance of world peace | 60,000,000 |
| 2. President's Air Policy Commission 1948: | |
| Recommended for 1948 (calendar year) | 84,000,000 |
| Recommended for 1949 (calendar year) | 56,000,000 |

Recommendations for minimum annual military aircraft—procurement and amount recommended by the budget for 1950—Con.

| | Pounds |
|---|---|
| 3. Congressional Aviation Policy Board: | |
| Initial strength to mount promptly an * * * successful air offensive requires | 111,000,000 |
| Strength necessary to prevent the loss of a war | 63,000,000 |
| 4. Stanford University survey (quoted by Associated Press, 1948): Minimum annual procurement needed to provide base for expansion | 80,000,000 |
| 5. Amount provided by 1950 budget | 34,000,000 |
| 6. Amount ordered in 1949 appropriations (estimated) | 45,000,000 |

While all of the groups that have surveyed the problem recommended an air force of 70 groups, the budget that has been given us proposes only 48 groups.

This budget is so startling that there is very little one can say about it except to ask for an explanation. What in the international situation has justified the abandonment of the long-term plan that competent authorities have deemed so essential? How have our foreign relations improved to justify abandoning the 70-group program? What reason is there for ignoring the findings of the Air Coordinating Committee, the Senate Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, the President's own Finletter Commission, the Congressional Aviation Policy Board, and the survey of Stanford University?

This budget means that aircraft-production programs, just barely started, must be cut back. Indeed, the cutbacks, with their attendant lay-offs of skilled workers, already have begun. In addition, large sums of money already expended for tooling, for expanded facilities, and for recruiting of workers will be wasted. Yet we are going to waste these sums of money and toss our expansion plans out of the window now, even though the budget message tells us quite plainly that 2 years from now we will have to go through the whole process again. We will at that time repeat the process of tooling up and expanding—only it will be more costly. We will have lost time.

NEED FOR MORE UNIFICATION

The report of the Congressional Aviation Policy Board emphatically warned the country and the defense establishment that more effective action should be taken to define the missions and the roles of the various components of the armed services. It was clear to all of us on that Board, as it has been to many other students of the problem, that without prompt and effective action to eliminate overlapping and duplication in the armed services it would never be possible to bring defense costs down to a reasonable level.

The current budget reduces the unification process to an absurdity, just as did the budget for fiscal year 1949. I can conceive of nothing more preposterous than a budget-making process that arrives at virtually identical figures for budget costs for each of the three services. The obligational authority for the Air Force in the new budget is $4,600,000,000; for the Navy is $4,600,000,000; and for the Army is $4,500,000,000. After a great deal of supposedly careful study of roles and missions and supposed adaptation of the missions to the realities of modern warfare, it has apparently been decided to toss a coin and divide the pie into three equal slices.

This is a fine way to settle a dispute among fraternity brothers, but it is patently absurd as a method of apportionment of the taxpayers' dollar. Think of a number and then divide it by 3 so as to provide us with the modern economical defense the Nation requires.

Unquestionably there must be a better way to eliminate overlapping and duplication in the armed services and to provide the funds we need to preserve our air power. Meantime, America's vaunted air power is being seriously crippled by the shut-down and cut-back in that productive capacity which is the basic of air power.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 36, TO ABOLISH THE UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES COMMITTEE

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, the voters in my district have shown by their vote on Tuesday, November 2, 1948, what they thought of the Un-American Activities Committee. The people of the whole country are sick and tired of the silly antics of that committee. The Un-American Activities Committee should be abolished and abolished immediately.

Dr. Condon is not the only eminent scientist to feel the smear of the Un-American Activities Committee. Scores of prominent educators, scientists, writers, and liberals have been smeared, maligned, slandered, and scored by the headline-hunting committee. And none of them was given a chance to present his story.

The Un-American Activities Committee flouted the fundamental rights of many of our citizens. It is directly or indirectly responsible for either murder or suicide. It is to blame for broken homes, broken lives, and shattered reputations. It ruined many an innocent person. It destroyed the earning capacity of many a promising Government worker. It drove some of our finest and ablest educators and scientists from Government service. This country can ill afford to lose such valuable men—men who can earn tenfold their Government salaries in private industry.

Such shocking examples of totalitarian tactics as featured some of the hearings of this committee brought shame and fear to millions of Americans who believe in fair play. While they dragged the red herring through the headlines they caused red faces among real Americans.

This committee failed to unearth a single case of fascistic activities in this country. They failed to uncover and publicize the hordes of anti-Semitic, anti-Catholic, anti-labor, anti-Negro, anti-foreign-born groups that infest many sections of our country. Such activities undermine our form of government as much, if not more, than the Reds and pinks.

The Communists must and should be watched. Spies and saboteurs should be routed. Government employees should be 100 percent loyal to America and beholden to no foreign power or foreign ideology. But this should be done in the American way, under the American Constitution and American concept of fair play.

The country has lost respect for, or confidence in, the Un-American Activities Committee. It has an important work to do and no matter how well-meaning its new members may be, they will fail to recapture the public confidence and respect. That is why I urge you to support House Resolution 36, which seeks to abolish the Un-American Activities Committee and assign its duties to the Judiciary Committee, where it belongs and where much good can be done for our American way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

LABOR EXTENSION SERVICE

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include certain resolutions from labor organizations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, 2½ years ago, I stood upon the floor of this House to speak in support of a bill to establish a Labor Extension Service within the Department of Labor. The bill had just been introduced by our former colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], who is now a valuable addition to the other body, and myself.

At that time—July 23, 1946—the Seventy-ninth Congress had just been bewitched by the siren voices of the NAM into providing for the removal of effective price control. These same siren voices were about to persuade the Eightieth Congress that it had a mandate to try to stampede the Nation back to normalcy, to use the words of the gentleman from Minnesota who was the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in that Congress. This was to be done by refusing to restore price control, but cutting taxes so as to increase purchasing power for high-income-tax payers by 59 percent, but only 3 percent for low-income-tax payers and by enacting the so-called Management-Labor Relations Act, which came to be known unfavorably as the Taft-Hartley Act.

In introducing my bill at that time, I expressed the hope that the bill, which then had wide nonpartisan public support in addition to the unanimous support of all of organized labor, might receive nonpartisan support in this House and in the Senate and that it might be reintroduced and receive attention, hearings, and enactment in the Eightieth Congress.

Such a bill was introduced in the Eightieth Congress in the House under the joint sponsorship of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. TOLLEFSON] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN]. In the other body, it was introduced by Senators WAYNE MORSE and ELBERT THOMAS.

In the other body, it received hearings in which broad support was manifested by witnesses representing labor, education, and other citizens' organizations and was reported favorably.

A subcommittee of the House Committee on Education and Labor held hearings ending in May but took no action on the bill before Congress adjourned. I may say that this inaction was not unique. Many other excellent bills which would have contributed much to the health and stability of our people and our Nation were left in that committee's deep-freeze locker when the Eightieth Congress passed from the scene.

The bill is now being reintroduced by me, and again being reintroduced in the other body by Senators MORSE and THOMAS of Utah. It is practically identical with the bill reported out favorably last year. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON] have introduced identical bills to mine in the House.

Mr. Speaker, enactment of such a bill is tragically overdue. When I stood on the floor of this House 2½ years ago to speak in behalf of this bill, I pointed out that in asking for its enactment labor was supported by organizations of teachers, civic, welfare, and church groups—all of them concerned, as were the responsible leaders of labor, with the working out of intelligent, fair, and peaceful solutions of industrial relations.

I pointed out then that the November 1945 management-labor conference called by the President, while unable to reach an agreement on some basic issues, had recommended in its report that there be greater educational activities among workers to stimulate a more constructive approach to collective bargaining and for the improvement of collective bargaining as a whole. That conference, held 3 years ago, recognized that the use of facts and reason is a desirable substitute for costly tests of economic strength in strikes and lock-outs.

In the Seventy-ninth Congress we heard much discussion of industrial relations. We heard heated denunciation and warm words in its defense.

In all this clangor in the Congress and throughout the Nation over management-labor relations in that first postwar year of readjustment, labor came forward with a united voice to ask for the enactment of this bill so that wage earners wanting access to facts and reason, and to training and skill in their use, as citizens and as workers in their relations with the community and employers, could have made available to them, as similar services have long been available to farmers, the accumulated knowledge and teaching resources of our institutions of higher learning.

Mr. Speaker, 2½ years ago I described the need for such a bill as urgent. There was a hunger and a demand then for more knowledge and understanding among wage earners themselves. It was and is a fact needing neither explanation nor apology that industrial workers and others in the lower-income groups of our population have for the most part been limited by the force of circumstances to education confined to the primary grades. Few have completed high school, and still fewer have been able to begin a university education.

Because of this hard fact, labor's part in the field of labor relations often reflects not only limited experience, but also a limited knowledge of relevant facts and limited facilities in dealing with such facts. Although labor leaders have displayed good American common sense and shrewdness in relations with management, some wage earners have had too little knowledge of the resources and methods available to them in equipping themselves for relations with management and with the community.

The demand which I described then has increased since. In 1946, support for the proposal had been expressed by more than 50 colleges and universities who were then offering on a small scale extension services to various kinds of wage earners and by many other institutions just starting such programs or prepared to undertake such programs if supplied with the necessary know-how and assistance.

Today, some 80 such institutions have small pilot operations under way. Surveys show that the demand is far beyond the ability of these institutions. In one instance, it has been reliably stated that a leading university is unable to meet more than 5 percent of the requests made for services. The demand for these services, to be made available by a labor extension division located within a rehabilitated Department of Labor, is supported by intelligent management, by educators, by church groups, and by other groups who are concerned with working out peaceful and equitable solutions of the many problems that now complicate industrial relations and the achievement of steady full production.

A labor extension service located within and drawing upon the resources of the Department of Labor and other agencies will make available to nonagricultural wage earners expanded resources and trained personnel, through the States and through institutions of higher learning within the States to aid in the diffusion of knowledge and understanding of these resources and training and experience in their use. Such understanding, such experience are prerequisite to the development of sound industrial relations. As I said 2½ years ago, before the enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act, the sooner a labor extension service is established, the sooner we will strengthen the foundation for equitable, reasonable, and peaceful industrial relations. Of course, labor cannot bring this about without the cooperation of management. The demand for this bill, which has grown steadily for the past 3 years, is proof positive that labor is willing and anxious to do its share toward the peaceful negotiation and settlement of discussions with management by the use of facts and reason on both sides of the bargaining table, with less and less recourse to the test of naked economic force.

As I pointed out then—and I think it will be more generally recognized today after the experience of the past 2 years—such peaceful, reasonable negotiation, turning upon and being decided by the facts, by reason, equity, and justice, freely practiced and without diminishing by one whit the right of freemen to withhold their labor or employment—is in the most profound sense in the public interest, in the national interest, and is conducive to the welfare of individual citizens and the democratic strength of our Nation.

Mr. Speaker, the Eightieth Congress did not elect to act upon this bill. In my opinion, the Congress, along with the press, radio, and too many of the so-called leaders of thought and opinion in the Nation, were swept into an anti-labor hysteria which resulted in the adoption of that incredible and incomprehensible hodge-podge of legal gobbledy-gook, dead-falls, and backfiring bazookas called the Taft-Hartley Act that was put together under unique circumstances by attorneys for interested and notoriously reactionary corporations. At this point, I cite the statement by the gentleman from New York [Mr. KLEIN] appearing on page 3421 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 15, 1947:

> The bill was actually written with the help of the National Association of Manufacturers and the United States Chamber of Commerce. Some of the most valuable assistance came from William Ingles, who represents Allis-Chalmers Co., Fruehauf Trailer Co., J. I. Case Co., the Falk Corp., and Inland Steel Co. Patrioteer Theodore R. Isserman put aside his rich Chrysler law practice for two full weeks to help out the House Labor Committee.

And also the opinion of the Taft-Hartley monstrosity expressed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN], appearing on page 3543 in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 16, 1947:

> The authors of this bill are clearly not interested in pushing the American economy steadily uphill to higher living standards. They are bent upon establishing monopoly control over the roller coaster and taking the American people for a dangerous ride.

Instead of choosing to promote fair and peaceful management-labor relations, insofar as men of good will and adequate information in the ranks of labor can do so, the Eightieth Congress preferred to adopt methods of regimentation, coercion, reprisal, division, and punishment, leveled unilaterally against the working men and women of America. That ill-starred venture, foisted upon the Congress and the American people under the misleading label of a bill to promote harmonious relations between management and labor, has been condemned and rejected by the American people in the November 2 elections.

Now we are ready for a fresh start in a new Congress and in a new climate of opinion in this country. We cannot make a better start than by accomplishing early repeal of the infamous and, I repeat, incomprehensible Taft-Hartley Act, and by speedily enacting this labor-extension service bill which, by promoting the quiet quest for truth, will help bring about peaceful collective bargaining and settlements between wage earners and employers—at least insofar as knowledge, skill, and good will among wage earners can promote that happy state of affairs. I make this qualification because peace, like war, requires two parties in its making. Employers must, of course, address themselves to facts and reason and meet labor halfway and deal fairly at the bargaining table.

The value and the urgency of this bill are not limited to the field of management-labor relationships, broad and important as that field is. Labor wants more than merely access to facts and knowledge that will equip and aid in matters related to employment. Labor wants access to other facts and skills that are stored up in our institutions of higher learning and, by public and private subsidy, are made available to those who can afford to attend these institutions as full-time resident students.

Labor wants parity with farmers in access to these riches of the mind so that nonagricultural wage earners and their families may participate more fully and effectively as citizens in the life of their community, their State, their Nation, and that part of the world which is still free.

Throughout our history, the relatively high level of education and informed intelligence among our people has been a principal source of national strength, welfare, and prosperity. It has contributed to our survival. It insured the production necessary to military victory.

As I pointed out 2½ years ago, our concern and practical provision for the diffusion of knowledge has been the shield of the Republic, protecting freedom and democracy against the stealthy encroachment of special privilege and economic power on the one hand and, on the other hand, that mob rule which lends itself so easily to the manipulations of cynical and unprincipled demagogs. Our defense against those dangers would have been even more effective if our provisions for the diffusion of knowledge had been more thorough and more practical.

Today this is truer and more obvious than ever. Nothing less than our maximum strength and intelligence as a nation of free individuals is enough for national security in the global conflict between freedom and totalitarianism. We need the more rapid diffusion of more and better knowledge among all our people.

For its part, labor is asking help in getting such access to that knowledge as other segments of our population already enjoy; the well-to-do because they have enough financial resources to take advantage of the public and private subsidized institutions; the farmers because the Federal Government, pursuant to the principles set up under the Morrill Act of 1862, has maintained the Agricultural Extension Service.

That act, be it noted in passing, established a national policy of promoting the diffusion among the people of useful knowledge for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, and for the benefit of the human beings engaged in those occupations. Federal funds devoted to the Agricultural Extension Service, which serves some 6,000,000 farm families, aggregate $14,000,000 a year. The bill introduced today does not carry a money figure, but it is estimated that the amounts finally determined to be adequate would be much smaller proportionately than the amount appropriated for the Agricultural Extension Service, in view of the fact that educational facilities available to nonagricultural wage earners and their families are somewhat better than those available to farm people. However, since the total to be served would be in the neighborhood of 47,000,000 nonagricultural wage earners, the ultimate cost might be somewhat greater than the total now being appropriated for the benefit of 6,000,000 farm families, though the per capita cost would be smaller.

The bill declares its purpose to be the promotion of "the welfare of wage earners, through a program for the dissemination of useful knowledge to provide a means by which the Nation may conserve the creative capacities of workers, and to promote cooperative relations and mutual understanding between labor and management."

Section 2 sets forth plainly the nature of the program to be made available to wage earners:

> There shall be established in the Department of Labor a Labor Extension Service. The program of the Labor Extension Service shall include the following:
> 1. Promotion of the welfare of wage earners and thereby the industries of which they are a part by developing and making available information useful to wage earners and their bona fide labor organizations in presenting factually and effectively their contribution to production as a basis for compensation and by making available information on practices in writing collective-bargaining agreements and in carrying out collective-bargaining activities and practices;
> 2. Making available information and research facilities concerning principles and techniques in labor and management relations appropriate to assure both full and continuous employment and production in a free-enterprise economy;
> 3. Making available information concerning living and working conditions;
>
> 4. Making available information on labor law and legislation and its administration;
>
> 5. Promoting through dissemination of knowledge constructive relations between workers and management which will contribute to the advancement of the public interest and of the national welfare and security;
> 6. Making available information on the significance of the free-enterprise system in the economic history and growth of the United States, and on the history of trade-unions, their responsibilities in promoting the understanding and appreciation of democratic processes, their rights, responsibilities, duties, and obligations with respect to the public, their members and fellow workers, and management, and their relationship to the development of democracy in the United States.

The bill provides for the establishment of a Labor Extension Service within the United States Department of Labor, for the establishment of a National Labor Extension Council, composed of representatives of institutions of higher learning and of the nonagricultural wage earners for whom the service is to be established.

The bill provides that services shall be provided only if, as, and when requested by nonagricultural wage earners themselves. When they wish such services, the bill provides that they may cooperate with an institution of higher learning in preparing a plan for classes and other methods of instruction. These plans, made to meet the needs of nonagricultural wage earners, within the purposes set forth in section 2 of the bill, are then to be presented to State boards provided for in section 5 of the act and consisting of representatives of cooperating institutions of higher learning and nonagricultural wage earners in the State.

This board, appointed by the governors, would, under the bill, assemble requests and plans as received and formulate a State plan. After checking to make sure that funds were available out of the total earmarked for each State under the bill's formula apportioning the total available Federal funds appropriated among the States on the basis of proportion of nonagricultural wage earners in the State to the total in the Nation, the board would forward the consolidated State plan, or supplements thereto, to the Secretary of Labor.

The bill provides that "the Secretary of Labor shall approve any plan which complies with the standards for State plans to be set up by Congress in section 6A."

As a further safeguard against so-called Federal dictation of program content, section 6C provides:

No department, agency, officer, or employee of the United States shall exercise any direction, supervision, or control over, or prescribe any requirements with respect to, any cooperating institution to which any funds which have been or may be available or expended pursuant to this act. No term or condition of any agreement or any other action taken under this act, whether by agreement or otherwise, shall seek to control in any manner, or prescribe requirements with respect to, the administration, the personnel, the curriculum, the instruction, the methods of instruction, or the materials of instruction of any cooperating institution.

Upon approval of a State plan, the Secretary would request the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the amount, "as determined by the State board," to each cooperating organization within each State, within the limits of the annual allotment earmarked for each State under the formula I have described.

Provision is made for matching Federal funds with at least 25 percent of State or local funds, which may be in cash, kind, or services.

The bill defines "cooperating institution" as meaning "any college, school, or institution in any State receiving the benefits of the act of July 2, 1862, and August 30, 1890, and acts supplemental thereto, and any other public or private nonprofit college, university, or research agency in any State, certified as eligible by the State board"—section 11 C.

I wish to insert this point in my remarks, a resolution adopted by the American Federation of Labor at its Cincinnati convention November 19, 1948, reading as follows:

The convention appreciates the executive council's support of the labor extension service bill and are sure that they will continue their efforts in behalf of this bill until same is finally made into law. It is moved and seconded that this portion of the executive council's report be accepted.

The portion of the A. F. of L. executive council's report to which the convention action refers follows:

Representatives of the American Federation of Labor appeared before the Senate and House committees in support of the principles of extension services for workers. Labor wants such a program. The Nation needs it. It seems unjustifiable that there should be an extension service program for agriculture and that a similar program for labor has not been provided by the Federal Government.

The success of such a program of labor extension services would, as in the case of the agricultural extension services, depend upon maintaining it on a cooperative basis with local labor requests and proposals initiating all undertakings.

Such an extension service would provide materials for workers in their union activities and educational projects.

And I also insert Resolution 14 adopted by the convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations at Portland, Oreg., November 22–26, 1948:

RESOLUTION IN SUPPORT OF A LABOR EXTENSION SERVICE IN THE UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR ADOPTED BY THE TENTH CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OF THE CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS, PORTLAND, OREG., NOVEMBER 22–26, 1948

Adult American wage earners suffer a gross inequity due to the almost total lack of public facilities for labor education, while American farmers have long enjoyed millions of dollars' worth of educational benefits through the Federal Agricultural Extension Service, and business and management representatives receive training and services through publicly supported State universities and other institutions.

A bill to establish a Labor Extension Service in the United States Department of Labor was introduced in the Eightieth Congress, through which workers' education services would be made available to unions on a Nation-wide scale, and the bill was approved by the Senate Committee on Labor and Education but was killed by the Republican leadership of the House of Representatives: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That legislation be enacted by the Eighty-first Congress to establish and provide Federal funds for a Labor Extension Service program to be administered by the United States Department of Labor to provide the Nation's adult workers with special educational services through the cooperation of universities and unions within the States; and that

All affiliated international unions, councils, and local industrial unions are urged to support the campaign to enact a Labor Extension Service bill by resolution, publicity, and communications to Members of Congress and cooperation with and financial assistance to the National Committee for the Extension of Labor Education, which is coordinating the drive for its enactment.

Since 1942, both the A. F. of L. and CIO have by annual convention action adopted resolutions supporting the plan for a labor extension service to be located within the United States Department of Labor. I quote the resolutions adopted by the 1947 conventions of the A. F. of L. and CIO:

RESOLUTION ON LABOR EXTENSION SERVICE PASSED BY THE SIXTY-SIXTH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR OCTOBER 1947, SAN FRANCISCO

Whereas the United States Congress enacted the Morrill Act on July 2, 1862, donating public lands to the several States and Territories to provide colleges for the benefit of those engaged in agriculture and the mechanical arts; and

Whereas these land-grant colleges over the years have not promoted the welfare of those engaged in the mechanical arts nor has the Department of Labor provided research and technical assistance to workers comparable to such services provided by the Department of Commerce for employers; and

Whereas a labor extension service bill has now been introduced in both Houses of Congress (S. 1390 and H. R. 4078) to amend the Morrill Act making specific provision for research, information, and educational extension services for workers through universities, colleges, and research agencies: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled reiterate its support for the immediate establishment of a labor extension service to provide research, information, and extension services to workers throughout the Nation through the enactment of S. 1390.

FROM THE REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OF THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR TO THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONVENTION, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., OCTOBER 6, 1947

Section on education (workers' service and education program)

Since the enactment of the program of Federal aid for the land-grant colleges, and the development, many years later, of the Agricultural Extension Service, the need for a similar service for industrial workers has been recognized.

However, no funds have been made available for such service. With the growing need for the development of a sounder appreciation of industrial and labor conditions, the need for such a service has been more and more recognized. During the last year, the American Federation of Labor, in cooperation with other interested groups, helped draft legislation which would establish such a service-educational program in the Department of Labor similar to the agricultural extension program in the Department of Agriculture. The legislation, which the committee on education of the American Federation of Labor helped prepare, would establish a Federal-State system of labor service centers working in cooperation with State and local trade-unions and in cooperation with such educational and research institutions as meet the standards set up by a national advisory board on which would serve representatives of education, professional persons, and labor.

Certain groups in the country, completely insensitive to the needs which such a service program would fulfill, have urged that the administration of such a program be placed in the United States Office of Education. However, there would be no more justification for transferring the Agricultural Extension Service from the Department of Agriculture, where it has always functioned, to the United States Office of Education than there would be for having the program affecting the industrial workers function away from the Department of Labor. It is important that such a program be recognized as a service program, which through research and educational assistance seeks to service the workers in a community, should be administered as a service program to these groups and should not at any time promulgate educational theories or promote the distribution of educational content.

The bill which the American Federation of Labor helped prepare contains the necessary safeguards and merits the active support of the federation.

And I quote from 1946 resolutions. First, from the A. F. of L.:

Such a service would give workers the material and tools with which to meet their educational needs. (Unanimously adopted, sixty-fifth convention, A. F. of L., Chicago, Ill., October 1946.)

Second, from the CIO:

All affiliated international unions, councils, and local industrial unions are urged to support this program, by resolution, publicity, financial assistance, and communications to their respective Members of Congress, and cooperate with the Committee for the Extension of Labor Education toward this end. (Unanimously adopted, eighth constitutional convention, CIO, Atlantic City, N. J., November 1946.)

Here is the endorsement of the bill by the spokesmen for railway labor:

Our association endorses the principle and objectives of this proposed legislation. (A. E. Lyon, executive secretary, Railway Labor Executives' Association, January 14, 1947.)

And I quote also statements by the presidents of these two great organizations of labor.

William Green, president of the A. F. of L., writing in the American Federationist, June 1946, said:

The Department of Labor should have a labor extension service similar to the Extension Service of the Department of Agriculture. The Morrill Act of 1862, under which the Agricultural Extension Service was set up, provided Federal aid for land-grant colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts. Labor was not represented in the executive branch of the Government at that time and did not benefit by this opportunity. Farmers, on the other hand, have been able to get research and technical advice on their daily problems, so that agricultural management has greatly improved. Every farmer has such aids readily available.

Workers need services to enable them to plan for progress and to promote their economic well-being. They need decentralized technical assistance to promote health and safety in places of work. They need to be sure of their rights as well as their responsibilities. They should have the necessary services readily available. All of the agencies properly within the Department should contribute information and experience to such a service.

And here is a statement by Philip Murray, president of the CIO, endorsing the principles, the purpose, and the method proposed in this bill for the establishment of a labor extension service:

A free labor movement is indispensable in a free world. This fact is often overlooked when labor disputes have given rise to demands for laws restricting labor's right to bargain collectively, to strike if need be, to defend its sacred political and economic rights.

To fetter labor with restrictive governmental regulation such as the Case bill is to endanger the very principle of American freedom. To establish constructive programs for the betterment of labor relations is to serve the welfare of the whole people.

A Labor Extension Service within the Department of Labor is one of many possible constructive programs which could foster good labor relations without sacrificing labor's freedom. It takes education and practical experience to participate effectively in collective bargaining. There must be a combination of skill, knowledge of facts, understanding of issues, knowledge of procedure. From the beginning the CIO has recognized this need. CIO has built an education department to supply information upon request from any CIO union. Many CIO internationals have developed their own education departments to fill the special needs of locals in the various industries. The larger the union know-how in collective bargaining the better the labor relations that will result.

It follows that a better stewardship will result in better grievance procedure through which the contract operates day by day.

Unions have grown by leaps and bounds in the last decade. Four million strong after World War I, organized workers now total 15,000,000. Each day new workers join our ranks. These numbers constitute a practical difficulty. We need more than skilled well-trained labor leaders. We must have skilled, well-informed union members. This means that we need new teachers, new techniques for teaching, new materials, pamphlet libraries, and educational films. Demands for education services are now so numerous and so urgent and have grown to such vast proportions that only a Government service can meet them. That service is a responsibility of the United States Department of Labor which can neither be ignored nor met halfheartedly.

A Labor Extension Service should be backed by all the resources of the Labor Department. In addition, the Labor Department should channel to the Labor Extension Service the many necessary facilities of other governmental departments. In other words, all the resources of Government should be integrated by the Labor Department to serve the people it was established to serve.

The country's farmers have had the benefit of extension services for many years. They can apply to the Department of Agriculture for technical help on their problems. They can ask for information, for research, for expert advice, and get them. As a matter of cold statistics the Nation's industrial workers outnumber the farmers, and no one seriously denies that the Nation's industrial health and well-being depend upon industrial workers. It is high time for the Labor Department to supply an extension service to the many workers upon whom so much of the country's future prosperity depends.

Finally, a partial list of organizations that have endorsed the plan for a Labor Extension Service within the Department of Labor:

LIST OF ORGANIZATIONS WHICH HAVE ENDORSED THE PLAN OF A LABOR EXTENSION SERVICE WITHIN THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

American Federation of Labor.
Congress of Industrial Organizations.
The railway brotherhoods.
American Labor Education Service.
Workers Education Bureau of America.
Young Women's Christian Association.
United Council of Church Women.
National Farmers Union.
Michigan Consumers League.
Michigan Federation of Teachers.
Detroit Federation of Teachers.
Workers Educational Service, University of Michigan.
Labor and Management Center, Yale University.
Hudson Shore Labor School.

Mr. Speaker, in supporting and asking for the early enactment of this bill, labor makes a challenge to this Congress. It is a challenge that I hope we will accept, and at an early date. It is a challenge to give practical aid and implementation to a plan for promoting a wider knowledge, better understanding, and greater use of facts and reason in the day-to-day relations between management and labor—in the shop, mine, mill, and factory. Of equal importance, it is a challenge to give richer resources to the 47,000,000 wage earners and their families, to be used by them as fully participating citizens in their community, State, and Nation who aspire to a fuller, richer life not only in creature comforts but in what has been called the delights and satisfactions of the mind and spirit.

In the long run, yes, Mr. Speaker, and in the short run, too, this positive, constructive method for promoting understanding and cooperation—insofar as labor, as the party of the first part, can promote such cooperation—will contribute a great deal to more peaceful and equitable management-labor relations and greater strength, dynamic stability, and security to our Nation as we enter upon a new phase in the long effort of mankind to establish on this earth both security, freedom, and dignity for the individual human being.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from a magazine.

Mr. GWINN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a speech made by Dr. Benson, of Arkansas.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. VAN ZANDT (at the request of Mr. GRAHAM), on account of death in family.

To Mr. KEARNEY (at the request of Mr. WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER), for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, January 17, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 17, 1949

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Help us, O God, to treat every human heart as if it were breaking, and to consider the feeling of others as we do our own.

Help us to be gentle, and to control our tempers that we may learn to love one another.

Give us the grace so to live this day, in the name of Jesus, who loves us all. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 13, 1949, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES—ARTICLE BY ARTHUR KROCK

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in the New York Times of January 14 there appeared an article by Arthur Krock which describes what might be happening now if the election for President and Vice President had been thrown into the House of Representatives. The article is so carefully thought out that it really takes rank as historical source material. In view of the fact that there is now pending before the Senate Judiciary Committee a proposal to amend the Constitution so as to count the electoral vote in proportion to the popular vote, I believe this article would be of particular interest to the Members of the Senate, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN THE NATION—JUST ABOUT NOW IF THE HOUSE WERE CHOOSING

(By Arthur Krock)

WASHINGTON, January 13.—Those citizens who were closely following the returns of the 1948 Presidential election in the early hours of November 3, and especially those whose business it was to inform the public of the outcome, will not soon forget the wobbling count in Ohio and California through the night. For until it became certain that these two States were to give their electoral votes to President Truman he lacked the majority necessary for election. They could not have brought victory to Governor Dewey by going Republican. He would have needed Illinois, too. But by doing so they would have thrown the election into the House of Representatives.

CLARITY ENDANGERED

Had that happened the House at this moment would probably still be balloting, with noon on January 20, 1949, drawing ever nearer, at which hour Mr. Truman's term as President expires by fiat of the twentieth amendment. The House would probably still be balloting because of the partisan compositions of the delegations from the 48 States that also were chosen on November 2. And if the deadlock had continued until noon on January 20, as well it might have, the country might have had a President whose title was not entirely clarified by the Constitution or the Statute of Presidential Succession.

The reasons are these:

1. When a national election is thrown into the House because no candidate has received an electoral majority—now 266—each State delegation is given one vote by the Constitution, and this vote is determined by the majority of its delegation. In the present House there are 21 delegations with a Democratic majority, 20 with a Republican majority, 3 that are evenly divided, and 4 which represent States carried by the Democratic States' rights ticket.

NO VISIBLE MAJORITY

2. The Constitution limits the House in such circumstances to make its choice from the three candidates who led in the national poll, and on November 2 these were President Truman, Governor Dewey, and Governor Thurmond. If each of the 45 delegations unevenly divided had obeyed the mandate of the voters in its State, none of the candidates would have had the required constitutional majority of 25 even if the three evenly divided delegations had contrived to vote.

3. Mr. Truman would have been obliged to swing four of the seven delegations from the evenly divided States, and those Democratic States in which he was defeated by Mr. Thurmond. Mr. Dewey would have required a shift of five. Mr. Thurmond would have required a shift of 21. So a deadlock on the Presidency might now be afflicting the Nation.

THE PRESSURE GROWS

4. As noon on January 20 drew nearer the pressures of these seven delegations would have produced violent emotions which can only be imagined by reading the history of similar situations in 1801, 1825, and 1877.

Of the delegations from these seven States (Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, and South Carolina—carried by Mr. Thurmond—and Connecticut, Idaho, and Montana—evenly divided), Louisiana, Idaho, and Montana—conceivably might have yielded to the pressure for President Truman. But it is difficult to envisage the same shift in Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina, and Connecticut. So Mr. Truman, with 24, would still be one short of the required majority.

5. Until or unless a member shifted in the Connecticut, Idaho, and Montana delegations these would have been unable to vote. This would have left 45 State delegations to produce a requisite majority of 23. But that would have been the same problem expressed in lower figures. Mr. Truman, Mr. Dewey, and Mr. Thurmond would then have needed shifts in 2, 3, and 19 delegations, respectively.

TWO WAYS OUT

Suppose the deadlock had continued until close to noon on January 20. How could the United States have acquired a President? On this point the twelfth amendment, the twentieth amendment, and the Statute of Succession of 1947 are not wholly clear, but the destructive condition might have been resolved without successful legal challenge in one of the following ways:

1. The Senate is composed of 96 Members, of whom a majority of 49 can elect a Vice President; if no candidate for that office has an electoral majority, from the two who polled the highest number of votes—in this case Senator BARKLEY and Governor Warren. There are 42 Republicans in this Senate, to whom for speculative purposes might be added the 8 from the 4 States carried by the Thurmond-Wright ticket, reducing the regular Democratic membership of 54 to 46, or 3 less than enough to choose Mr. BARKLEY. A shift of only 3 Senators from the Dixiecrat States would have made him Vice President, and in such circumstances this is more than conceivable. On the failure of the House to choose a President by noon on January 20 this Vice President would have become President for the full term, but once again there would have been no Vice President.

2. If both House and Senate had been deadlocked at noon on January 20, Public Law 199, the Statute of Succession, seems to provide that the Speaker (now SAM RAYBURN) would have become Acting President.

This nightmare vision of a might-have-been furnishes another reason for such electoral reform as the Lodge-Gossett-Kefauver bill proposes.

DAMAGE FROM FLOODS IN BERKSHIRE COUNTY, MASS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in Berkshire County, Mass., which is the county at the extreme western end of the State, there were very serious floods on December 31, 1948. These floods underline the need for farsighted action and planning to prevent the recurrence of such disasters in the future. They also point to the need for immediate help in every possible way. Because of the importance of this matter, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed at this point in the RECORD a statement published by the County Commissioners of Berkshire County descriptive of the harm which was done.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
OFFICE OF THE BERKSHIRE
COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Estimated municipal damage caused by the flood in Berkshire County on December 31, 1948. These figures were submitted to the Berkshire County commissioners by the selectmen or road commissioner for each town and by the mayor or commissioner of public works for each city in the county, and they do not include private damage.

IMPROVEMENTS IN ORGANIZATION AND OPERATION OF THE GOVERNMENT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 42)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives.)

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

REPORT ON THE STATE OF FINANCES

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, his annual report on the state of the finances, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1948 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Finance.

GENERAL SUPPLY FUND OF BUREAU OF FEDERAL SUPPLY

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the more economical operation of the general supply fund of the Bureau of Federal Supply, Department of the Treasury, and for other purposes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

AUDIT REPORT OF DEFENSE HOMES CORPORATION

A letter from the Comptroller General, transmitting, pursuant to law, an audit report of the Defense Homes Corporation, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1948 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

REPORT OF VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

A letter from the Administrator of the Veterans' Administration, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the activities of that Administration, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1948 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Finance.

REPEAL OF CERTAIN PROVISION OF ECONOMIC COOPERATION ACT OF 1948

A letter from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to repeal a provision of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948 requiring certain expenditures in the fiscal year 1949 to be considered as expended during the fiscal year 1948 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORT OF UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION

A letter from the Chairman of the United States Maritime Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, the quarterly report of that Commission on its activities and transactions under the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, for the period October 1 through December 31, 1948 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORT OF WAGE AND HOUR AND PUBLIC CONTRACTS DIVISIONS

A letter from the Administrator of the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Divisions, Department of Labor, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of those Divisions for the year ended June 30, 1948 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

CREATION OF POSITIONS IN CERTAIN HEADQUARTERS OF NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS

A letter from the Chairman of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the creation of 10 professional and scientific positions in the headquarters and research stations of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

REPORT OF CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE CO.

A letter from the vice president and comptroller of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., Washington, D. C., transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of that company for the calendar year 1948 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers and documents on the files of several departments and agencies of the Government which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and Mr. LANGER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS

The following petitions were presented, and referred, as indicated:

By Mr. MAYBANK:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact legislation equalizing the differential for the marketing of tobacco under the grading and tieing system

"Whereas the tobacco markets in the State of South Carolina are losing approximately 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 pounds of tobacco each year by reason of the fact that the system of grading and tieing is required in this State, while in the adjoining State of Georgia tobacco is sold ungraded and untied; and

"Whereas the differential of 4 cents per pound provided in this State is not sufficient to equalize the cost of labor and the loss of 5 to 10 percent in weight incurred in marketing tobacco under the grading and tieing system: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America is memorialized to enact legislation which will either increase the differential provided for the marketing of tobacco under the grading and tieing system from 4 cents to 10 cents per pound or require the acceptance of ungraded and untied tobacco by the flue-cured tobacco stabilization corporation in this State during the times in which the tobacco markets in the State of Georgia are open, to the end that the inequities accruing by the system of marketing tobacco in South Carolina under the grading and tieing system will be met; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each of the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from South Carolina in the Congress of the United States of America."

By Mr. BUTLER:

A resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nebraska; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"Legislative Resolution 2

"Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States with respect to a national compulsory sickness insurance program

"Whereas the American people now enjoy the highest level of health, the best standards of scientific medical care, and the finest medical institutions ever attained by any major country in the world; and

"Whereas these accomplishments of American medicine are the results of a free people working under a system of free enterprise; and

"Whereas the experience of all countries where government has assumed control of medical care has been a progressive deterioration of medical standards and medical care, to the detriment of the health of the people: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the members of the Nebraska Legislature in sixty-first session assembled:

"1. That the Legislature of the State of Nebraska respectfully request the Congress of the United States to refrain from imposing upon the citizens of this Nation any form of compulsory insurance or any system of medical care designed for national bureaucratic control.

"2. That Nebraska Senators and Representatives now in the Congress of the United States be, and are hereby, respectfully requested to use every effort at their command to prevent the enactment of such legislation.

"3. That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the clerk of the legislature to the President of the United States, the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, the United States House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Congressman from Nebraska."

REPORT OF INVESTIGATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE OF COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS (S. REPT. NO. 5)

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I submit the First Annual Report of the Investigations Subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. This report summarizes the work of the Investigations Subcommittee since its organization on March 1, 1948.

This subcommittee, of which I had the privilege of acting as chairman, conducted a number of investigations which have resulted in financial savings in the executive branch of the Government, and have effected greater efficiency in several of the executive branches. I do not now intend to take up the time of the Senate discussing in detail the work of the subcommittee, because I believe that the record speaks for itself. However, I should like to mention one or two special cases in passing. As a result of the work of this subcommittee and its predecessor, the Special Senate Committee Investigating the National Defense Program, the Air Force has completely revised and streamlined its investigative procedures. This single action on the part of the Air Force will undoubtedly make for greater efficiency and savings in that important branch of our armed services and should go a long way to prevent the recurrence of cases similar to that involving former Maj. Gen. Bennett E. Meyers. In another case, involving the use of public storage facilities by the Government Printing Office in Baltimore, Md., it is estimated that the investigation by the subcommittee resulted in an annual saving to the Government of approximately $75,000 a year. This saving resulted from the fact that after our investigation started the Government Printing Office reviewed its storage requirements in the city of Baltimore and made substantial reductions in the amount of space being rented in that city.

Mr. President, the subcommittee also conducted several other investigations and submitted reports to the Senate in the following cases:

First. The investigation of the Federal employees' loyalty program.

Second. The administration of export controls.

Third. The conduct of the Ilse Koch war crimes trial.

Fourth. The Voice of America, which was a joint report with the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

There is little doubt that each of these investigations resulted in pointing out and correcting deficiencies in our Government.

Mr. President, as retiring chairman of the subcommittee, I wish to state here on the floor of the Senate that the success which this investigating subcommittee has enjoyed is attributable to the time and effort which the members and staff of the committee have devoted to the work. On several occasions various committee members came back to Washington during the recess period in order to take part in our investigations and they have spent many long hours examining the facts in the various cases presented to us and in taking testimony from the many witnesses who appeared in our public and executive hearings. Our staff, under the direction of its chief counsel, Mr. William P. Rogers, has done an excellent job. The subcommittee has been fortunate in having on its staff a number of men and women of wide training and experience in the investigative field. I believe that all the committee members of both parties will agree with me that our staff has always performed its tasks in an outstanding and bipartisan manner.

I regret that because of other committee assignments I will not be associated with the subcommittee in the Eighty-first Congress. But I wish to emphasize, as does this first annual report, the importance of the investigative function of the Congress. As the report states, and I reiterate:

> The mere existence of an active congressional investigating committee has had a pronounced salutary effect on the executive departments. Employees and officials of executive agencies tend to give more thoughtful consideration to their decisions when they realize that Congress is in a position to call them to answer for their actions.

Mr. President, I sincerely believe that the continued existence of a fair-minded, progressive investigating subcommittee in the Congress is in the public interest.

Before I entirely dissociate myself with the investigating subcommittee I wish to point out one more important matter discussed in this first annual report, that is, the matter of the rules of procedure which were adopted and uniformly followed by the subcommittee. I believe, and I have always believed, it to be a fundamental matter of great importance that the proceedings of congressional investigating groups be conducted fairly and judiciously. Although I did not entirely agree with all the rules of procedure adopted by this subcommittee, as they are set out in the report, I have followed these rules as have the other members of the committee in the belief that it is necessary to protect the rights of individuals and the rights of the public in the conduct of congressional investigations. To my knowledge this is the first congressional investigating group which has ever adopted and followed such an elaborate set of rules, and to my knowledge this is the first time that such rules have been published publicly.

Mr. President, in view of the widespread discussion, both publicly and in the Halls of Congress, concerning rules of procedure for investigating committees, I believe that every Member of this body would do well to study and examine carefully the procedural rules which have been adopted by the subcommittee. These rules were adopted after careful study for the purpose of giving individuals under investigation every reasonable protection against unfair treatment or unjust defamation, without impairing or curtailing the traditional investigatory powers of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and printed.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

CONVENTION CONCERNING STATISTICS OF WAGES AND HOURS OF WORK IN PRINCIPAL MINING AND MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate remove the ban of secrecy with regard to the convention concerning statistics of wages and hours of work in the principal mining and manufacturing industries, including building and construction, and in agriculture, Executive G, Eighty-first Congress, first session, which was sent to the Senate today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the ban of secrecy is removed from the convention, and the convention, together with the President's message of transmittal, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and the President's message will be printed in the RECORD.

The President's message is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith an authenticated copy of the text of a convention concerning statistics of wages and hours of work in the principal mining and manufacturing industries, including building and construction, and in agriculture (No. 63), adopted by the International Labor Conference at its twenty-fourth session held at Geneva June 2–22, 1938.

This is the same convention which was transmitted to the Senate with the message of the President of April 24, 1939, with a recommendation favorable to ratification. As the Senate did not find it possible to take action with respect to the convention during the war, I informed the Senate of my desire to withdraw it for further study and consideration in the light of developments since 1939, and on April 17, 1947, the Senate directed that the convention be returned to me.

A fresh appraisal has been made of the provisions of the convention, and the Departments of State, Labor, and Agriculture have indicated that in their opinion the convention should be ratified. In this connection, I transmit herewith the report on the convention made to me by the Acting Secretary of State and copies of communications from the Secretary of Labor and the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture with regard to the convention.

In view of the desirability of furthering international efforts to assure the development of uniform statistics relating to basic enterprises, I request that the Senate give its advice and consent to ratification of this convention, subject to the understanding that, in accordance with the provisions of article 23 thereof, the convention shall apply only to the continental United States.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 17, 1949.

(Enclosures: 1. Report of the Acting Secretary of State; 2. Authenticated copy of text of convention No. 63; 3. Letter from Secretary of Labor, copy; 4. Letter from Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, copy.)

NOMINATION OF DEAN G. ACHESON TO BE SECRETARY OF STATE — EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE (EX. REPT. NO. 1)

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as in executive session, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably the nomination of Dean G. Acheson, of Maryland, to be Secretary of State, and I submit a report thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received and the nomination will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the able Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has just reported the nomination of Mr. Dean Acheson to be Secretary of State. May I ask him, for the information of the Senate, to indicate when he intends to have this nomination taken up on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, because of the fact that we are anxious to prevent any interregnum between the outgoing of Secretary Marshall and the assumption of the office by the new Secretary, it had been my purpose to ask that the Senate consider the nomination tomorrow.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky if that is the prospect?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes, it is my purpose to move, when the Senate concludes its business today, that it adjourn until tomorrow.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Has the Senator from Michigan any objection?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; that is perfectly satisfactory.

By Mr. MORSE:

S. 544. A bill to further amend section 302 (c) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended by section 202 (a) of the Agricultural Act of 1948; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

S. 545. A bill to provide for Federal participation in rights-of-way and other costs in connection with the authorized local flood protection project on Amazon Creek at and in the vicinity of Eugene, Oreg.; to the Committee on Public Works.

FEDERAL FUNDS FOR IMPROVEMENT OF LOCAL PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], and the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill authorizing the appropriation of Federal funds to assist the States in improving and expanding their local public health services. Most Americans today take for granted their local health departments, unaware of the shocking deficiencies in health protection which result each year in 200,000 needless deaths, in sickness, poor health, and tremendous economic loss.

They do not know that less than 10,000,000 of our 146,000,000 people have professional, full-time health departments to guard their water, milk, and meat supplies from contamination, to supervise disposal of sewage and garbage and control communicable diseases.

Forty million Americans lack the basic protection of full-time health departments. Another 85,000,000 have only the dubious protection of understaffed health offices.

Disease-carrying flies, mosquitoes, and rats cannot be quarantined. The germs in today's garbage can be on your lunch tomorrow.

Public health is too often the forlorn stepchild among governmental services. Public health departments are too often pushed off into courthouse basements or attics, in abandoned schoolhouses, or old-fashioned dwellings. Only one-tenth of the local health departments in the United States have facilities for carrying on a reasonably adequate public health program.

Health departments are desperate for trained, competent workers. Miserably low salaries are driving them into other jobs. There has been a 75-percent turnover among State health officers alone during the past 6 years.

The bill we are introducing, in providing Federal funds in aid to the States, would take a long step toward helping to get enough trained doctors, nurses, and technicians into the local and county health departments to carry on the great fight of preventive medicine against tuberculosis, syphilis, malaria, typhoid and undulant fever, hookworm, pellagra, infantile paralysis, dental caries, and the epidemic diseases.

The bill would help provide health examinations for our children at the all-important preschool age, when so many physical defects can be discovered and corrected.

The bill, which gives aid on the basis of need, fully protects State control and administration of health programs and has the endorsement of the State and Territorial Health Officers Association, the American Public Health Association, and the American Medical Association. The bill is sponsored by some 30,000 chapters and 5,000,000 members of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

In urging the bill Mrs. L. W. Hughes, PTA president, recently declared:

> This Nation is looked up to for its preeminence in medicine, sanitation, and cleanliness. Yet so long as millions of our people live under primitive public health conditions we must bow our heads in shame.

America has produced wondrous new drugs, equipment, and methods for mending and healing the human body. Yet we neglect to take the basic precautions of preventive medicine through adequate public health services. We must stop thinking of health so much in terms of remedies and cures, and begin thinking primarily in terms of prevention.

Benjamin Franklin said nearly 200 years ago that "public health is public wealth."

This bill will help America preserve her greatest resource—the health of her people—now being wasted by the pennywise denial of adequate support for public health services.

The bill (S. 522) to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize assistance to States and political subdivisions in the development and maintenance of local public health units, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. HILL (for himself, Mr. SALTONSTALL, Mr. CORDON, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. CHAPMAN, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. MALONE, Mr. KEFAUVER, and Mr. KNOWLAND), was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN WORKS AT BONNERS FERRY, IDAHO

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to authorize the construction of certain works at Bonners Ferry, Idaho, in the interest of flood control and allied purposes.

Last year we suffered a very bad flood in Idaho, and this year there is a heavy snowfall, and unless action is taken, I am afraid it will result in the necessity for the expenditure of much more money than if we lock the stable before the horse goes out.

The bill (S. 524) authorizing the construction of certain works of improvement at Bonners Ferry, Idaho, in the interest of flood control and allied purposes, introduced by Mr. TAYLOR, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Works.

REORGANIZATION OF GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY], the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], and myself I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for the reorganization of Government agencies, and for other purposes, in line with the message from the President just read. If enacted, the bill would be designated the "Reorganization Act of 1949."

The purpose of the bill is to increase efficiency and economy by reducing the number of Government agencies, eliminating duplication and overlapping, and obtaining better organization of the Government.

The bill carries out the recommendations made to the Congress by the President in the message which was read a few moments ago, as well as the recommendations of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, in accordance with the letter submitted by the chairman of that Commission, former President Herbert Hoover, which was incorporated in the RECORD last week.

Both the President and the Commission have advised Congress that a simplified method of reorganization similar to that formerly authorized by the Reorganization Acts of 1939 and 1945 is essential for the substantial improvement in organization of the Government. This bill generally resembles the Reorganization Act of 1945, which became inoperative on April 1, 1948, but it is broader in scope, and is intended to be permanent rather than temporary legislation.

The bill empowers the President to submit reorganization plans which become effective after 60 days unless rejected by concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. President, I shall not at this time go into any further detail regarding the bill, but I should like to announce that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments will schedule hearings on the measure at an early date, and we shall undertake to hear, of course, those who are interested in the legislation, especially Members of the Senate who would like to be heard on it.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD the bill as introduced, together with a statement indicating that part of the Reorganization Act of 1945 which has been eliminated from the bill. It also indicates new provisions included in the measure I am presenting which were not in the 1945 act.

I do this so that Members of the Senate may easily ascertain, by reading this material, what the differences are, better to enable them to prepare any testimony they may wish to present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill, together with the statement by the Senator from Arkansas, will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 526) to provide for the reorganization of Government agencies, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MCCLELLAN (for himself, Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. MCCARTHY, Mr. HOEY, and Mr. O'CONOR) was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

TITLE I

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This act may be cited as the "Reorganization Act of 1949."

NEED FOR REORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 2. (a) The President shall examine and from time to time reexamine the organization of all agencies of the Government and shall determine what changes therein are necessary to accomplish the following purposes:

(1) to promote the better execution of the laws, the more effective management of the executive branch of the Government and of its agencies and functions, and the expeditious administration of the public business;

(2) to reduce expenditures and promote economy, to the fullest extent consistent with the efficient operation of the Government;

(3) to increase the efficiency of the operations of the Government to the fullest extent practicable;

(4) to group, coordinate, and consolidate agencies and functions of the Government, as nearly as may be, according to major purposes;

(5) to reduce the number of agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head, and to abolish such agencies or functions thereof as may not be necessary for the efficient conduct of the Government; and

(6) to eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort.

(b) The Congress declares that the public interest demands the carrying out of the purposes specified in subsection (a) and that such purposes may be accomplished in great measure by proceeding under the provisions of this act, and can be accomplished more speedily thereby than by the enactment of specific legislation.

REORGANIZATION PLANS

SEC. 3. Whenever the President, after investigation, finds that—

(1) the transfer of the whole or any part of any agency, or of the whole or any part of the functions thereof, to the jurisdiction and control of any other agency; or

(2) the abolition of all or any part of the functions of any agency; or

(3) the consolidation or coordination of the whole or any part of any agency, or of the whole or any part of the functions thereof, with the whole or any part of any other agency or the functions thereof; or

(4) the consolidation or coordination of any part of any agency or the functions thereof with any other part of the same agency or the functions thereof; or

(5) the authorization of any officer to delegate any of his functions; or

(6) the abolition of the whole or any part of any agency which agency or part does not have, or upon the taking effect of the reorganization plan will not have, any functions, is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 2 (a), he shall prepare a reorganization plan for the making of the reorganizations as to which he has made findings and which he includes in the plan, and transmit such plan (bearing an identifying number) to the Congress, together with a declaration that, with respect to each reorganization included in the plan, he has found that such reorganization is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 2 (a). The delivery to both Houses shall be on the same day and shall be made to each House while it is in session. The President, in his message transmitting a reorganization plan, shall specify with respect to each abolition of a function included in the plan the statutory authority for the exercise of such function.

OTHER CONTENTS OF PLANS

SEC. 4. Any reorganization plan transmitted by the President under section 3—

(1) shall change, in such cases as he deems necessary, the name of any agency affected by a reorganization, and the title of its head; and shall designate the name of any agency resulting from a reorganization and the title of its head;

(2) may include provisions for the appointment and compensation of the head and one or more other officers of any agency (including an agency resulting from a consolidation or other type of reorganization) if the President finds, and in his message transmitting the plan declares, that by reason of a reorganization made by the plan such provisions are necessary. The head so provided for may be an individual or may be a commission or board with two or more members. In the case of any such appointment the term of office shall not be fixed at more than 4 years, the compensation shall not be at a rate in excess of that found by the President to prevail in respect of comparable officers in the executive branch, and, if the appointment is not under the classified civil service, it shall be by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate;

(3) shall make provision for the transfer or other disposition of the records, property, and personnel affected by any reorganization;

(4) shall make provision for the transfer of such unexpended balances of appropriations, and of other funds, available for use in connection with any function or agency affected by a reorganization, as he deems necessary by reason of the reorganization for use in connection with the functions affected by the reorganization, or for the use of the agency which shall have such functions after the reorganization plan is effective, but such unexpended balances so transferred shall be used only for the purposes for which such appropriation was originally made;

(5) shall make provision for winding up the affairs of any agency abolished.

LIMITATIONS ON POWERS WITH RESPECT TO REORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 5. No reorganization plan shall provide for, and no reorganization under this act shall have the effect of—

(1) abolishing or transferring an executive department or all the functions thereof or consolidating any two or more executive departments or all the functions thereof; or

(2) continuing any agency beyond the period authorized by law for its existence or beyond the time when it would have terminated if the reorganization had not been made; or

(3) continuing any function beyond the period authorized by law for its exercise, or beyond the time when it would have terminated if the reorganization had not been made; or

(4) authorizing any agency to exercise any function which is not expressly authorized by law at the time the plan is transmitted to the Congress; or

(5) increasing the term of any office beyond that provided by law for such office; or

(6) transferring to or consolidating with any other agency the municipal government of the District of Columbia or all those functions thereof which are subject to this act, or abolishing said government or all said functions.

TAKING EFFECT OF REORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 6. (a) Except as may be otherwise provided pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, the provisions of the reorganization plan shall take effect upon the expiration of the first period of 60 calendar days, of continuous session of the Congress, following the date on which the plan is transmitted to it; but only if, between the date of transmittal and the expiration of such 60-day period there has not been passed by the two Houses a concurrent resolution stating in substance that the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan.

(b) For the purposes of subsection (a)—

(1) continuity of session shall be considered as broken only by an adjournment of the Congress sine die; but

(2) in the computation of the 60-day period there shall be excluded the days on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain; except that if a resolution (as defined in section 202) with respect to such reorganization plan has been passed by one House and sent to the other, no exclusion under this paragraph shall be made by reason of adjournments of the first House taken thereafter.

(c) Any provision of the plan may, under provisions contained in the plan, be made operative at a time later than the date on which the plan shall otherwise take effect.

DEFINITION OF "AGENCY"

SEC. 7. When used in this act, the term "agency" means any executive department, commission, council, independent establishment, Government corporation, board, bureau, division, service, office, officer, authority, administration, or other establishment, in the executive branch of the Government, and means also any and all parts of the municipal government of the District of Columbia except the courts thereof. Such term does not include the Comptroller General of the United States or the General Accounting Office, which are a part of the legislative branch of the Government.

MATTERS DEEMED TO BE REORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 8. For the purposes of this act the term "reorganization" means any transfer, consolidation, coordination, authorization, or abolition, referred to in section 3.

SAVING PROVISIONS

SEC. 9. (a) (1) Any statute enacted, and any regulation or other action made, prescribed, issued, granted, or performed in respect of or by any agency or function affected by a reorganization under the provisions of this act, before the effective date of such reorganization, shall, except to the extent rescinded, modified, superseded, or made inapplicable by or under authority of law or by the abolition of a function, have the same effect as if such reorganization had not been made; but where any such statute, regulation, or other action has vested the function in the agency from which it is removed under the plan, such function shall, insofar as it is to be exercised after the plan becomes effective, be considered as vested in the agency under which the function is placed by the plan.

(2) As used in paragraph (1) of this subsection the term "regulation or other action" means any regulation, rule, order, policy, determination, directive, authorization, permit, privilege, requirement, designation, or other action.

(b) No suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against the head of any agency or other officer of the United States, in his official capacity or in relation to the discharge of his official duties, shall abate by reason of the taking effect of any reorganization plan under the provisions of this act, but the court may, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after such reorganization plan takes effect, showing a necessity for a survival of such suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, allow the same to be maintained by or against the successor of such head or officer under the reorganization effected by such plan or, if there be no such successor, against such agency or officer as the President shall designate.

UNEXPENDED APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 10. The appropriations or portions of appropriations unexpended by reason of the operation of this act shall not be used for any purpose, but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

PRINTING OF REORGANIZATION PLANS

SEC. 11. Each reorganization plan which shall take effect shall be printed in the Statutes at Large in the same volume as the public laws, and shall be printed in the Federal Register.

TITLE II

SEC. 201. The following sections of this title are enacted by the Congress:

(a) As an exercise of the rule-making power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of each House, respectively, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in such House in the case of resolutions (as defined in sec. 202); and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(b) With full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change such rules (so far as relating to the procedure in such House) at any time, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of such House.

SEC. 202. As used in this title, the term "resolution" means only a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress, the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "That the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan numbered transmitted to Congress by the President on , 19 ", the blank spaces therein being appropriately filled; and does not include a concurrent resolution which specifies more than one reorganization plan.

SEC. 203. A resolution with respect to a reorganization plan shall be referred to a committee (and all resolutions with respect to the same plan shall be referred to the same committee) by the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House of Representatives, as the case may be.

SEC. 204. (a) If the committee to which has been referred a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan has not reported it before the expiration of 10 calendar days after its introduction (or, in the case of a resolution received from the other House, 10 calendar days after its receipt), it shall then (but not before) be in order to move either to discharge the committee from further consideration of such resolution, or to discharge the committee from further consideration of any other resolution with respect to such reorganization plan which has been referred to the committee.

(b) Such motion may be made only by a person favoring the resolution, shall be highly privileged (except that it may not be made after the committee has reported a resolution with respect to the same reorganization plan), and debate thereon shall be limited to not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing the resolution. No amendment to such motion shall be in order, and it shall not be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which such motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

(c) If the motion to discharge is agreed to or disagreed to, such motion may not be renewed, nor may another motion to discharge the committee be made with respect to any other resolution with respect to the same reorganization plan.

SEC. 205. (a) When the committee has reported, or has been discharged from further consideration of, a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan, it shall at any time thereafter be in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of such resolution. Such motion shall be highly privileged and shall not be debatable. No amendment to such motion shall be in order and it shall not be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which such motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

(b) Debate on the resolution shall be limited to not to exceed 10 hours, which shall be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing the resolution. A motion further to limit debate shall not be debatable. No amendment to, or motion to recommit, the resolution shall be in order, and it shall not be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution is agreed to or disagreed to.

SEC. 206. (a) All motions to postpone made with respect to the discharge from committee, or the consideration of, a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan, and all motions to proceed to the consideration of other business, shall be decided without debate.

(b) All appeals from the decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the rules of the Senate or the House of Representatives, as the case may be, to the procedure relating to a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan shall be decided without debate.

SEC. 207. If, prior to the passage by one House of a resolution of that House with respect to a reorganization plan, such House receives from the other House a resolution with respect to the same plan, then—

(a) If no resolution of the first House with respect to such plan has been referred to committee, no other resolution with respect to the same plan may be reported or (despite the provisions of sec. 204 (a)) be made the subject of a motion to discharge.

(b) If a resolution of the first House with respect to such plan has been referred to committee—

(1) the procedure with respect to that or other resolutions of such House with respect to such plan which have been referred to committee shall be the same as if no resolution from the other House with respect to such plan had been received; but

(2) on any vote on final passage of a resolution of the first House with respect to such plan the resolution from the other House with respect to such plan shall be automatically substituted for the resolution of the first House.

The statement presented by Mr. McCLELLAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MCCLELLAN

DRAFT OF BILL ON EXECUTIVE REORGANIZATION

There is shown below a comparison between the text of the Reorganization Act of 1945 (59 Stat. 613) and the currently proposed draft bill (S. 526) on executive reorganization. The black bracketed text was included in the 1945 act but is not retained in the current bill; and the italic text is included in the new bill but was not included in the 1945 act.

By Senator MCCLELLAN (for himself and on behalf of Senators EASTLAND, HOEY, MCCARTHY, and O'CONOR):

The delivery to both Houses shall be on the same day and shall be made to each House while it is in session. The President, in his message transmitting a reorganization plan, shall specify with respect to each abolition of a function [specified] included in the plan the statutory authority for the exercise of such function.

"OTHER CONTENTS OF PLANS

"SEC. 4. Any reorganization plan transmitted by the President under section 3—

"(1) shall change, in such cases as he deems necessary, the name of any agency affected by a reorganization, and the title of its head; and shall designate the name of any agency resulting from a reorganization and the title of its head;

"(2) may include provisions for the appointment and compensation of the head and one or more [assistant heads] other officers of any agency (including an agency resulting from a consolidation or other type of reorganization) if the President finds, and in his message transmitting the plan declares, that by reason of [transfers, consolidations, and coordinations made by the plan, the responsibilities and duties of such head are of such nature as to require such action] a reorganization made by the plan such provisions are necessary. The head so provided for may be an individual or may be a commission or board with two or more members. In the case of any such appointment the term of office shall not be fixed at more than 4 years, the compensation shall not be at a rate in excess of [$10,000 per annum,] that found by the President to prevail in respect of comparable officers in the executive branch, and, if the appointment is not under the classified civil service, it shall be by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate;

"(3) shall make provision for the transfer or other disposition of the records, property, and personnel affected by any [transfer, consolidation, coordination, or abolition] reorganization;

"(4) shall make provision for the transfer of such unexpended balances of appropriations, and of other funds, available for use in connection with any function or agency [transferred, consolidated, or coordinated,] affected by a reorganization, as he deems necessary by reason of the [transfer, consolidation, or coordination] reorganization for use in connection with the [transferred, consolidated, or coordinated] functions affected by the reorganization, or for the use of the agency [to which the transfer is made,] which shall have such functions after the reorganization plan is effective, but such unexpended balances so transferred shall be used only for the purposes for which such appropriation was originally made;

"(5) shall make provision for winding up the affairs of any agency abolished.

"LIMITATIONS ON POWERS WITH RESPECT TO REORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 5. [(a)] No reorganization plan shall provide for, and no reorganization under this act shall have the effect of—

"(1) abolishing or transferring an executive department or all the functions thereof or [establishing any new executive department; or] consolidating any two or more executive departments or all the functions thereof; or

"[(2) changing the name of any executive department or the title of its head, or designating any agency as 'Department' or its head as 'Secretary'; or]

"[(3)] (2) continuing any agency beyond the period authorized by law for its existence or beyond the time when it would have terminated if the reorganization had not been made; or

"[(4)] (3) continuing any function beyond the period authorized by law for its exercise, or beyond the time when it would have terminated [if the reorganization had not been made, or beyond the time when the agency in which it was vested before the reorganization would have terminated] if the reorganization had not been made; or

"[(5)] (4) authorizing any agency to exercise any function which is not expressly authorized by law at the time the plan is transmitted to the Congress; or

"[(6) imposing, in connection with the exercise of any quasi-judicial or quasi-legislative function possessed by an independent agency, any greater limitation upon the exercise of independent judgment and discretion, to the full extent authorized by law, in the carrying out of such function, than existed with respect to the exercise of such function by the agency in which it was vested prior to the taking effect of such reorganization; except that this prohibition shall not prevent the abolition of any such function; or]

"[(7)] (5) increasing the term of any office beyond that provided by law for such office [.] ; or

"(6) transferring to or consolidating with any other agency the municipal government of the District of Columbia or all those functions thereof which are subject to this Act, or abolishing said government or all said functions.

"[(b) No reorganization plan shall provide for any reorganization affecting any agency named below in this subsection; except that this prohibition shall not apply to the transfer to such agency of the whole or any part of, or the whole or any part of the functions of, any agency not so named. No reorganization contained in any reorganization plan shall take effect if the reorganization plan is in violation of this subsection. The agencies above referred to in this subsection are as follows: Interstate Commerce Commission, Federal Trade Commission, Securities and Exchange Commission, National Mediation Board, National Railroad Adjustment Board, and Railroad Retirement Board.]

"[(c) No reorganization plan shall provide for any reorganization affecting any civil function of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, or of its head, or affecting such Corps or its head with respect to any such civil function. No reorganization contained in any reorganization plan shall take effect if the reorganization plan is in violation of this subsection.]

"[(d) No reorganization plan shall provide for a reorganization affecting any agency named below in this subsection if it also provides for a reorganization which does not affect such agency; except that this prohibition shall not apply to the transfer to such agency of the whole or any part of, or the whole or any part of the functions of, any agency not so named. No reorganization contained in any reorganization plan shall take effect if the reorganization plan is in violation of this subsection. The agencies above referred to in this subsection are as follows: Federal Communications Commission, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, United States Tariff Commission, and Veterans' Administration.]

"[(e) If, since January 1, 1945, Congress has by law established the status of any agency in relation to other agencies or transferred any function to any agency, no reorganization plan shall provide for, and no reorganization under this act shall have the effect of, changing the status of such agency in relation to other agencies or of abolishing any such transferred function or providing for its exercise by or under the supervision of any other agency.]

"[(f) No reorganization specified in a reorganization plan shall take effect unless the plan is transmitted to the Congress before April 1, 1948.]

"TAKING EFFECT OF REORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 6. (a) [The reorganizations specified in the plan shall take effect in accordance with the plan] Except as may be otherwise provided pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, the provisions of the reorganization plan shall take effect upon the expiration of the first period of 60 calendar days, of continuous session of the Congress, following the date on which the plan is transmitted to it; but only if, between the date of transmittal and the expiration of such 60-day period there has not been passed by the two Houses a concurrent resolution stating in substance that the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan.

"(b) For the purposes of subsection (a)—

"(1) continuity of sessions shall be considered as broken only by an adjournment of the Congress sine die; but

"(2) in the computation of the 60-day period there shall be excluded the days on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain; except that if a resolution (as defined in section 202) with respect to such reorganization plan has been passed by one House and sent to the other, no exclusion under this paragraph shall be made by reason of adjournments of the first House taken thereafter.

"(c) Any provision of the plan may, under provisions contained in the plan, be made operative at a time later than the date on which the plan shall otherwise take effect.

"DEFINITION OF 'AGENCY'

"SEC. 7. When used in this act, the term 'agency' means any executive department, commission, council, independent establishment, Government corporation [wholly or partly owned by the United States which is an instrumentality of the United States], board, bureau, division, service, office, officer, authority, administration, or other establishment, in the executive branch of the Government [.], and means also any and all parts of the municipal government of the District of Columbia except the courts thereof. Such term does not include the Comptroller General of the United States or the General Accounting Office, which are a part of the legislative branch of the Government.

"SEC. 8. For the purposes of this act the term 'reorganization' means any transfer, consolidation, coordination, [abolition, change, or designation of name or title, disposition, winding up of affairs, or provision for the appointment and compensation of the head or assistant heads of an agency,] authorization, or abolition, referred to in section 3. [or 4, shall be deemed a 'reorganization'.]

"SAVING PROVISIONS

"SEC. 9. (a) (1) Any statute enacted, and any regulation or other action made, prescribed, issued, granted, or performed in respect of or by any agency or function [transferred to, or consolidated or coordinated with, any other agency or function] affected by a reorganization under the provisions of this act, before the effective date of such [transfer, consolidation, or coordination,] reorganization, shall, except to the extent rescinded, modified, superseded, or made inapplicable by or under authority of law or by the abolition of a function, have the same effect as if such [transfer, consolidation, or coordination] reorganization had not been made; but where any such statute, regulation, or other action has vested [functions] the function in the agency from which [the transfer is made] it is removed under the plan, such [functions] function shall, insofar as [they are] it is to be exercised after the [transfer,] plan becomes effective, be considered as vested in the agency [to which the transfer is made under the plan.] under which the function is placed by the plan.

"(2) As used in paragraph (1) of this subsection the term "regulation or other action" means any regulation, rule, order, policy, determination, directive, authorization, permit, privilege, requirement, designation, or other action.

"(b) No suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against the head of any agency or other officer of the United States, in his official capacity or in relation to the discharge of his official duties, shall abate by reason of the taking effect of any reorganization plan under the provisions of this act, but the court may, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after such reorganization plan takes effect, showing a necessity for a survival of such suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, allow the same to be maintained by or against the successor of such head or officer under the reorganization [so] effected by such plan or, if there be no such successor, against such agency or officer as the President shall designate.

"UNEXPENDED APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 10. The appropriations or portions of appropriations unexpended by reason of the operation of this act shall not be used for any purpose, but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

"PRINTING OF REORGANIZATION PLANS

"SEC. 11. [If the reorganizations specified in a] Each reorganization plan which shall take effect [, the reorganization plan] shall be printed in the Statutes at Large in the same volume as the public laws, and shall be printed in the Federal Register.

"TITLE II

NOTE.—The text of title II of the currently proposed bill is the same as the text of title II of the Reorganization Act of 1945, approved December 20, 1945, 59 Stat. 613. That title prescribes the procedure by which the two Houses of Congress consider and dispose of reorganization plans.

PROMOTION OF MAXIMUM EMPLOYMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a bill which I and a number of other Senators introduced in the last Congress. It was then Senate bill 1652. The bill is to promote maximum employment, business opportunities, and careers in a free-enterprise country. It has particular reference to the welfare of veterans. I shall not read the names of Senators whose names appear on the bill as sponsors. The names of some Senators who were on the bill in the last Congress also appear on the present bill as sponsors. There are quite a number of sponsors of the present bill who were Members of the last Senate. In addition the names of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] appear on the bill. On behalf of myself and the other Senators who are sponsors of it, I introduce the bill and ask for its appropriate reference.

The bill (S. 529) to promote maximum employment, business opportunities, and careers in a free competitive economy, introduced by Mr. BARKLEY (for himself, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. KEFAUVER, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. CAIN, Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. HILL, Mr. JENNER, Mr. MCGRATH, Mr. KNOWLAND, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. MORSE, Mr. FLANDERS, Mr. FERGUSON, and Mr. GREEN was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

SUPPORT PRICE OF MILK

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to support the price of milk at not less than 90 percent of parity as the law provides, and I ask that it be appropriately referred. The bill covers all milk, regardless of ultimate use.

The bill (S. 538) to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to support the price of milk at not less than 90 percent of parity, introduced by Mr. WILEY, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement as to why I am introducing this bill, which, incidentally, is a companion measure to a bill already introduced in the House of Representatives (H. R. 1333) by my able colleague from Wisconsin, Representative REID F. MURRAY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator may proceed.

DECLINE OF MILK PRICES

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, as everyone who has been following the farm situation knows, milk prices have been gradually falling, and the health of the dairy segment of our economy is in jeopardy. When the agricultural section of our economy becomes impaired, the whole economy feels the impact and is impaired. It is just common sense that we begin to think of our own a little bit, as well as responding to our obligations in relation to our neighbors in foreign lands. We have heard a lot of discussion lately in relation to making sure that we do not go into an economic tailspin. The sort of measure which I am introducing today, if it became law, would stop the tailspinning of a very important section of our economy. While my own State is 50-percent agricultural, the production of milk is the main element in its agricultural program.

But the subject of this bill is not a partisan matter, or just a State-wide or regional matter. It is a subject that calls for earnest consideration by every thinking legislator. Most of the 170,000 dairy farms in my State are relatively small in size. As a consequence, they have not gotten the benefits of large-scale production as have the growers of wheat, for example, in the case of big farms in some other States.

The dairy farmer's income has been increasingly limited, and his lot has been helped only where he has been fortunate enough to have a large family to help him meet the problems of the labor shortage and the high costs of labor. But with the high costs of feed and fertilizer, the high costs of machinery, and other supplies, his net income has been relatively low. Throughout the war years, by working extended hours, he and his wife and children have been able to make a go of it, to purchase high-priced machinery in many instances.

I may say, Mr. President, that when I left Wisconsin last fall I paid $2,600 for a tractor, with a little addition, which in 1939 could have been bought for $900 for my farm. That is a slight indication of what is happening.

I may divert from my prepared remarks for a moment to say that, in relation to the general price of milk in Wisconsin, the farmer is getting about 7 cents a quart, but, of course, the consumer is paying anywhere from 19 to 21 cents for the same milk. The people of the United States were sold a bill of goods in the last campaign, particularly when a certain group tried to make out that the farmer was getting the big end of the deal. The very milk which is produced and sold at a little over 7 cents a quart, in less than 2 or 3 hours reaches the housewife, and the price then is from 19 to 21 cents a quart.

During the war years, about which I have been speaking, we have seen a depletion in the soil on the farm and a depreciation in the farmers' houses and barns and sheds. They have deteriorated because the farmers have not been able to keep them up, first, because it was not possible to get the labor necessary; second, the farmer could not get the material; and, third, he did not have the time to do the necessary work. So, if farming is to continue, the farmer must have sufficient income to meet the costs entailed in rebuilding his soil and repairing his home. Otherwise there will be a continued exodus from the farms, with the result which may be expected.

As I have said, in my own State 50 percent of the income of the commonwealth depends upon agriculture. The economic life of the villages and cities depends upon the purchasing power of the farmers, and if we permit the condition of the farms to deteriorate, we will reap the whirlwind.

DANGERS OF DROP IN FARM INCOME

If aid cannot be given the farmers, it will be found that the milk-cow herds will gradually be reduced further in numbers, and with that reduction will come also further depletion in the soil and further depletion of the beef supply of the Nation. It is not generally known that a large portion of the meat supply of this country comes from these very dairy farms. More than 40 percent of that supply comes from that source. We think of it as coming from the plains of the West, but more than 40 percent comes from these very dairy cows.

Mr. President, let us remember that the dairy industry is the largest single source of farm income. This very industry, the dairy industry, supplies approximately 40 percent of our beef and veal, as well as all our milk. The dairy farmers of America have indicated in no uncertain terms that they are not going to stand idly by and allow their prices to go through the floor, or see the days brought back when they had to dump milk from trucks onto the road because they could not get a fair price for the so-called "surplus milk" they were producing.

Not only the farmers, but the businessmen, tradesmen, professional men, and bankers in villages and in the cities of the States where milk is produced, are clearly concerned over this situation. A threat to the farmer's income is a threat to everyone's income, because he is the greatest buyer and purchaser of the things labor produces. It is imperative, Mr. President, that we do not allow the whittling away of the farmers' income.

The farmer asks no more than the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. He asks no more than fair prices in return for his back-breaking toil. He is entitled to fair prices, and this bill will help assure such prices for him.

I ask unanimous consent that following my remarks a short article from a Wisconsin newspaper, the Arcadia News-Leader, entitled "The Milk Market," be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE MILK MARKET

The Wisconsin milk market is wavering uncertainly, and farmers and their leaders are angrily worried about it. Last July the average price paid Wisconsin producers for milk going into all uses was $4.43 per hundredweight. In December the price had declined to $3.65. Farmers wondered about the future market, as they studied their production plans and problems for the new year.

From the Pure Milk Products Cooperative, one of the State's largest and most enterprising, came a resentful blast about the price trend. Said W. O. Perdue, of Fond du Lac, cooperative manager: "There is no sound reason for today's low price paid to farmers for manufactured milk. Consumer demands remain firm. National income is still at a record high. * * * It leads us to believe there has been a great harvest for the speculator—at the expense of the farmer."

The cooperative and its members produce largely for the evaporated milk market, which has been shaky of late. Perdue said the cooperative would renew its efforts to obtain a Federal evaporated milk market order under which the producers would have a part in establishing prices.

UNITED STATES FLAG SHIPPING PARTICIPATION IN GOVERNMENT-FINANCED CARGOES

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for a United States flag shipping participation in Government-financed cargoes, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement by me explaining the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Maryland will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 543) to provide for United States flag shipping participation in Government-financed cargoes, introduced by Mr. O'CONOR, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR O'CONOR RE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION PROVIDING FOR UNITED STATES FLAG SHIPPING PARTICIPATION IN GOVERNMENT-FINANCED CARGOES

Recently the Administrator for ECA, Mr. Paul G. Hoffman, announced his intention no longer to require that 50 percent of the ECA bulk cargoes be carried on United States flag ships unless such ships are available at competitive rates. I believe that under existing circumstances this action is ill-advised.

The American people are making tremendous sacrifices to supply aid to the countries of western Europe whose economy has been disrupted by the ravages of war. It is essential, of course, that the great sums of money appropriated for this purpose be handled in accordance with good business practices. And unquestionably the Administrator is acting in conformance with the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, which provides that he shall assure, so far as is practicable, that at least 50 percent of the gross tonnage of commodities purchased within the United States out of ECA funds shall be transported on United States flag vessels to the extent such vessels are available at market rates.

While understanding the reasons prompting the Administrator's position, we must not forget that there is even more urgency in the protests that have been raised against ECA's contemplated reduction in shipping in American bottoms. It is of the greatest importance to our country that the American merchant marine be maintained on a level necessary for the conduct of America's business throughout the world. We cannot, in reason, provide funds that will be used to build up the merchant marine of other nations, while American shipping, on which the lifeblood of our country's economy is dependent, is allowed to remain idle.

The argument that it is good business to penalize American shipping because costs are somewhat higher would, if carried out to its logical conclusion, necessitate the passing over of countless American products, because they might be available at lower prices in other countries, where the standard of living is tremendously lower than here, and where costs of production are less.

In a bill which I have introduced in the Senate it is provided that products purchased by the Government or any agency of the Government or through funds or credits allocated for this purpose, i. transported by water, shall be transported on United States flag vessels, at market rates for United States flag vessels, to at least 50 percent of the gross tonnage of such commodities, computed by countries, and separately for dry bulk carriers, dry cargo liner, and tanker services.

The bill further stipulates that this minimum of 50 percent of gross tonnage must be maintained unless the United States Maritime Commission, after investigation, shall certify that United States flag vessels are not available in sufficient numbers or at market rates for United States flag vessels to effectuate the purpose of the act.

It further directs all departments and agencies to cooperate with the Commission through their agreements covering transportation of purchases and requires the Commission to report to the Congress within 90 days after the enactment of the act and every 4 months thereafter the record of shipping covered by this legislation.

HEARINGS BY COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. MAYBANK submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 33), which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Resolved, That in holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by section 134 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the Eighty-first Congress to make such expenditures, and to employ upon a temporary basis such investigators, and such technical, clerical, and other assistants, as it deems advisable.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

SEC. 3. Upon the termination of the special committee, authorized pursuant to Senate Resolution 20, Eightieth Congress, to study the problems of American small business enterprises, the files and records of such committee shall be transferred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

ADDRESSES, ETC., AT INAUGURATION OF GOVERNOR OF PUERTO RICO

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD immediately following my remarks certain statements made recently at San Juan, Puerto Rico, on the occasion of the inauguration of its first elected Governor, the Honorable Luis Muñoz-Marín. These statements include: First, the personal message sent by President Truman to Senator Muñoz-Marín, Puerto Rico's first elected Governor; second, the address made by the President's special representative at the Governor's inauguration, Oscar L. Chapman, Under Secretary of the Department of the Interior; and, third, the inaugural address delivered by the Governor-elect, Luis Muñoz-Marín.

Mr. President, I believe all will agree that the inauguration of the first elected Governor in Puerto Rico, 450 years after its discovery, marks an epoch in the history of the Western Hemisphere. It is further evidence that we in the United States are continuing to foster democratic processes, and shows that we are not interested in the growth or development of a colonial system. A similar epochal meeting in Manila on July 4, 1946, attended by representatives of the United States, also bears this out.

It was my good fortune to attend the Manila ceremonies, but it was impossible for me to be in Puerto Rico at the time of the Governor's inauguration ceremonies. Having been the author of the legislation authorizing an elected Governor for Puerto Rico, I very much wanted to be present, and regret that it was impossible. Since the ceremonies took place on January 2, 1949, many other Members of Congress who had planned to attend this historic ceremony were also unable to be there. I hope some of us will be able to go to Puerto Rico at a later date to pay our personal respects to Governor Muñoz-Marín and to the good people of Puerto Rico. I feel certain that all Members of Congress will be interested in reading the statements now being made a part of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S MESSAGE TO THE HONORABLE LUIS MUÑOZ-MARÍN ON THE OCCASION OF HIS INAUGURATION AS FIRST ELECTED GOVERNOR OF PUERTO RICO

DEAR SENATOR: Your inauguration as the first elected Governor of Puerto Rico is a happy and historic event. For you personally as a loyal son of Puerto Rico and of a distinguished father who spent his life in the service of his native land, it should be a profound satisfaction. It is no less so for all of us who have followed with interest and admiration the progress of the Puerto Rican people under your leadership.

Your election as governor by an impressive majority after a warmly contested campaign in which so large a proportion of the Puerto Rican people exercised their right to vote is a fine demonstration of American democracy in action.

The peaceful election of a citizen of Puerto Rico as Governor by the ballots of its own people is a further important step along the road to complete self-government which is the ideal and goal of American policy toward all our Territorial areas.

You have my congratulations and best wishes for an administration full of constructive achievements. I recall with great pleasure the cordial reception extended to me by the people of Puerto Rico when I visited the island last spring and I extend to them through you my New Year's greetings and the assurance of my deep interest in their welfare.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

SPEECH BY OSCAR L. CHAPMAN, UNDER SECRETARY, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, AND SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, AT INAUGURATION OF HON. LUIS MUÑOZ-MARÍN AS GOVERNOR OF PUERTO RICO ON JANUARY 2, 1949

My delight at being here on this very historic occasion is exceeded only by President Truman's disappointment at not being able to come. He asked me to express his deep regret and recall to you his very great enjoyment of his visit last spring. He recognizes, as do I, that this inauguration of Luis Muñoz-Marín, as the first elected Governor of Puerto Rico, is not only a long stride forward in the island's 50 years' march toward self-government, but it also marks the first time in the history of America, if not the world, that a Territorial people has been given the right to choose its own chief executive.

I know how much this means to the people of Puerto Rico. I can assure you that all Americans are just as happy as you are over what is happening here today. Those of us who, in our history, have suffered also the irritations of appointed authority, as you have, are happy because we feel this demonstrates to the world once again our fundamental belief in self-government and our desire to avoid anything that even resembles colonial exploitation.

From now on you make your own laws as before, and you administer them through your own elected Governor, and through men chosen by him. As of today Puerto Rico has virtually all of the advantages of self-government enjoyed by the 48 States of the American Union—plus many financial benefits not enjoyed by those States. Indeed, the status of Puerto Rico has become so favorable as compared with the States, that many of our businessmen are seriously considering, or have already decided upon, establishing their businesses and even their residences in your beautiful island.

On behalf of the President, and on my own behalf, I want to congratulate your new Governor, your retiring Governor, your able Resident Commissioner, and the people of Puerto Rico. President Truman has asked me to read the following message to Governor Muñoz-Marín:

(Mr. Chapman read and personally handed to the Governor President Truman's message, which precedes this address.)

In the sentiment he expressed in the message, President Truman was speaking for all the rest of the American people. Though most of us have never lived under an outside government, our whole tradition of self-government is based upon an unhappy experience of that kind about 150 years ago. In those days, I might add, our forefathers had neither the privilege of electing their own governors, nor the tax concessions enjoyed by Puerto Rico today. Had the leaders of the British Empire recognized our basic political and economic rights, our history might have been quite different.

I do not want to give the impression that I feel the glory of this occasion belongs to us, rather than to you. This unprecedented grant of self-rule was earned by the people of Puerto Rico who, through 50 years under the American flag, have shown a clear and unquestioned ability to govern themselves and handle their own problems with wisdom and maturity.

No people in the Western Hemisphere have struggled under more adverse circumstances. Your population is denser on your limited land resources than the population of any country in this hemisphere. You started this 50-year battle for economic independence and self-government with little education and with tremendous health problems.

Yet despite these handicaps, the people of Puerto Rico have maintained a steady climb upward on the ladder of economic and social progress, particularly during the past fey years under two great American Presidents—Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry S. Truman.

In the past 50 years your illiteracy has declined from 79 percent to 31 percent, and to a figure probably below that today. Despite the tremendous increase in your population, school facilities per child of school age have doubled. Your annual income has become the highest in the Caribbean; your doctors and your facilities for medical care have multiplied; your housing and diet, though still inadequate, have been improved tremendously; your transportation system has been developed from almost nothing, and your industry is now expanding at a sensational rate.

From the long-range standpoint this industrial expansion is the most promising of all your economic developments. Within recent years 40 new industries have been started and more are on the way. Industrial expansion offers hope for balancing your unfavorable trade balance with the mainland, for increasing your per capita income and your standard of living. I have tremendous faith in the future of Puerto Rican industry. Together with migration, I believe it can solve most of the economic problems resulting from your dense population.

Puerto Rico's growth to political maturity has been just as remarkable as her climb up the economic ladder. Only 50 years ago you were under military government as a conquered territory after 400 years as a colonial possession of Spain. The Foraker Act in 1900 set up a civil government, but under the complete control of the President and Congress. You were citizens of Puerto Rico, but not of the United States.

The first big advance came in 1917 when Congress passed the Jones Act which remains today as the Organic Act of Puerto Rico. That made you citizens of the United States, provided for a legislature elected by the people, and gave you a bill of rights similar to ours. This event today marks the next big advance. It results from congressional recognition of your political maturity.

Your recent progress has come under the leadership of a great man—your new Governor, Luis Muñoz-Marín. It would be difficult to find a more appropriate selection for your first elected Governor than Luis Muñoz-Marín on the basis of ability and accomplishment. Thoroughly trained in the traditions and culture of both the Americas, he has demonstrated outstanding qualities as a writer, an orator, a political leader, and a statesman. He has been the fountain head and the driving force behind much of the phenomenal progress made by Puerto Rico in the last decade. Furthermore, he was born, quite appropriately, the year Puerto Rico came under the American flag, as a worthy son of Luis Muñoz Rivera—distinguished patriot and leader of Puerto Rico in the difficult period of transition from the Spanish to the American way of life.

I cannot close these remarks without paying tribute to another great Puerto Rican and great American—Jesús T. Piñero—who as your Resident Commissioner and your first Puerto Rican Governor, was a powerful force in accelerating the progress we are celebrating today. Governor Piñero's warm personality, his integrity, and his perseverance, won the confidence and respect of Members of Congress and everyone else who knew him in Washington.

I wish it had been possible for me to make at least a portion of my remarks today in the beautiful Spanish tongue which most of you have always spoken. To me it is most appropriate that here where Anglo Saxon and Spanish cultures are mingled, both languages should be used and understood by everyone. It is inevitable that Puerto Rico will serve more and more as a very important bridge between the Americas, a source of trained bilingual technicians and leaders, a perfect place for international conferences, a common meeting ground where North America and Central and South America, and the Caribbean area can also feel at home and be understood.

In this very important cultural aspect, no less than in the fields of social and economic achievement, I foresee a brilliant future for Puerto Rico, a future which the people of the United States will be proud to share. To Gov. Luis Muñoz-Marín and all his people I say good luck, and God bless you.

MUÑOZ-MARÍN INAUGURAL ADDRESS

I have just taken an oath to serve the people of Puerto Rico faithfully in the office which I have assumed today. Let it be understood as sincerity, and not a lack of humility, when I say that it was not necessary for me to do so. With an oath or without it, the forces of my conscience have sought to make my life an oath of service to my people. In the government or out of it, there is this obligation for everyone who sees ways of serving, and who feels that he has the strength to do so.

By the vital nature—not merely of law—of this oath, there is no reason why you should not all share it with me. The courage, the hope, and the fortitude of this people expect it from all—from all those who in one form or another of public administration, of legislation, in the capitol, in the departments, in the municipalities, in the barrios—have some one function of service, be it notable or humble. It is also expected from all those who in private activity have functions that affect the lives of many—those who make our industries, those who manage our marketing, those who develop cooperatives, those who give the workers the force of organization, those who think, those who study, those who teach, those who heal the sick, those who minister to the soul as before the mystery of the unknown. From all these, the great human masses of our island, who know how to face adverse destiny with strength and dignity, expect an oath of dedication. And they expect that this will not be an oath of condescending paternalism, but one with good democratic meaning.

The great masses owe it to themselves to take this oath that every life serve better the nobility of spirit that animates it, that every hand serve better the land that it cultivates and the tools that it uses and thus justice and liberty for all; that every mind serve better its own understanding and thus the clearer understanding of all. It is in this way and not by an oath and the dedication of one man alone, or of some men, that the people of Puerto Rico may, within the smallness of their territory, realize the greatness of their destiny. It is not necessary to say the oath out loud. Rather it belongs to the higher voice of the conscience of all those who are listening to me here, and of all those who tomorrow will hear those who have heard me today. This is the basis of my program of government, because it is the basis of a program of life for the people.

To this attitude the multiple actions of government itself, should refer, from the care of the most remote country road to the greatest plans for education, production, and justice. To this attitude should be referred also fundamentally, everything in private action that may be of public interest and consequence. To this attitude also should be referred fundamentally, in accordance with the free determination of the consciences concerned, all that which, because of honest differences of thought is to constitute the opposition to the forms and manners in which the government directs the uphill struggle of this people.

The situation of this people growing on a small island is serious. But the ability of this people is greater than the seriousness of their situation. The affliction of this people is great; its courage is greater. Its spiritual qualities are magnificent, and they have scarcely begun to use these magnificent qualities. No plan of government, or of private initiative, can produce full results if these magnificent qualities are not put into day-to-day use.

Our people have the quality; all that has to be done is to continue clarifying it in order that it covert itself, definitely, into a creative attitude, already growing, with which it will better the plans, diagrams, and purposes, of its struggle in the great challenge that destiny presents to them.

Our people, naturally have virtues and faults. To deny the faults is to incur another fault. But it is a fact that the people of Puerto Rico have excellent virtues. Of these, I would say that the most valuable are: Natural intelligence that provides a great facility for learning techniques and democracy alike; fortitude, generosity; and a humanist attitude that keeps them at a healthy distance from obsolete contemporary nationalism and that makes them feel better as members of Christendom than as inhabitants of political frontiers. Because of this it is that Puerto Rico seemingly a colony, in a deeper sense is not one; and, able to be a nation in a narrow sense, has neither great objections to, nor great preoccupations about, being one.

I believe that ours is a people that does not need juridical definitions as an aid to spiritual welfare. And this, in the world of atomic energy, is a preeminent and pioneer virtue. To find its way out of obsolete colonialism it does not feel compelled to recur to obsolescent nationalism. It finds itself more compelled to search in its own understanding, and to look to its leaders, for new creative roads more in harmony with the immense fact of atomic energy and with the immeasureableness of the Christian attitude.

I have mentioned the two great forces—the only ones that are truly great—of the time in which we live. The only other force that can stand up against the atomic is the Christian, and not only in the sense of churches, but in the root that the equality of all men before the history of life has in the conscience. The people of Puerto Rico, without having thought, nor debated, nor analyzed, feel itself, by a spontaneous attitude to belong to the brotherhood of man. I suspect that it is not Puerto Rico alone, but many peoples, that have this quality and that only historical circumstances have prevented them from expressing it clearly.

I believe that this is the appropriate moment to point out, for today and tomorrow, the factors that contribute to my thinking on political status. There are two truths that I seem to see clearly. One is that colonialism is obsolete and is disappearing with relative speed from the face of the earth. The other is that the narrow nationalistic spirit is obsolescent, and is disappearing, with dangerous slowness, from the face of the earth. Conditions of modern life make colonialism undesirable, in many cases even for those who until yesterday were its beneficiaries. They also, with every day that passes, make enlightened living together more difficult, in terms of national sovereignty, for the creatures of God who inhabit the nations. It seems more evident each day that there is no way in which multiple weak hands, proud, jealous, suspicious, futilely authoritarian, of the multiple sovereignties, can cope with the atomic bomb, nor with creative atomic energy in its day. Neither socialism, nor capitalism, nor communism, nor nationalism, are forces comparable to the tremendous and ineluctable force of atomic energy. Only Christianity, in its practical sense of human equality, is a force of the spirit that can contend with material atomic force. Only by carrying the feeling of brotherhood to the modes and practical institutions of his life can man find his way out of the tragic blind alley, into which he has got himself by permitting his science to develop more rapidly than his wisdom to guide its use. I am not referring, it should be clear, to brotherhood in a merely sentimental sense. The change that is in order is that of the attitude deeply understood through wisdom, vigorously clarified by intelligence, and severely judged and maintained by conscience.

Within this frame, what are colonies? They constitute a form of political relationship that is disappearing, that is due to disappear completely. Those who live in them object to them. Those who dominate them—with some notable exception in Asia—no longer need them, although at times, because of a false sense of prestige, they avoid acting on the fact. If the narrow nationalistic concept is to disappear, so that it will not be civilization itself that disappears, and if the colonial concept is disappearing, then the situation is that archaic colonialism is in danger of becoming archaic nationalism. Without a stout revolution in thinking, that is the futility of the picture—the battle of the gig to convert itself into a carriage in a world of airplanes; the squandering of spiritual force in the fight to convert the obsolete into the obsolescent, to get out of something that has no reason to exist in order to enter into something that sooner or later will not have reason to exist either.

It seems clear to me that what an anquished community clamors for from its leaders—its intellectual, religious, scientific, cultural, and political leaders—is hard creative thought, deep understanding of human values.

Specifically, how is all this related to the problem or political status in Puerto Rico? We should not fall into the well-known intellectual vice of raising grand ideas in order to escape from practical obligations. Hardly could Puerto Rico contribute in any appreciable manner to the solution of the great world problem; and our obligation here is to try to solve the problem of Puerto Rico. One more small nationality is not going to aggravate the tragedy of the national concept in the face of atomic forces. One small nationality less is not going to mitigate it. Then, how is what I have said related to what it falls to us to do in Puerto Rico in fraternal cooperation with all the people of the United States?

The relation is this. The colonial system not only is going to disappear in Puerto Rico, but is already speedily disappearing, much more so than in other places. In what colony, in what part of the world or in what time, has there taken place an act like this? What colony has ever elected, with the free votes of its people, its own legislative and executive government? No greater tribute can be paid to the people of the United States, and particularly to their President and Congress, than recognition of the unprecedented nature of their action. Traces remain of the colonial system in Puerto Rico; but it is evident that colonialism is being abolished rapidly in this community. There is still some distance to travel. Precisely for this reason it should be our concern to see well where we are going, what the objective is ahead of us. Can it be the limited national concept?

The United States tomorrow can, without loss, declare Puerto Rico a nation apart; and the most notable political novelty would be a change in my title and that of my successors. But there could be economic changes that would be highly damaging in their effect of restricting the integral liberty, in their work, in their commerce, in the betterment of their homes, in security, in the creative dynamism of millions of human beings who could hardly be benefited by a change in my title.

It can be said that a people should not place high things of the spirit in the balance with material things. I not only admit this, but energetically affirm it; they should not. But it is not a mere material convenience to be free from want, to have path of hope that liberates from hopelessness; and, above all, the narrow national concept is not a high value of the human spirit in the times of anguish and creation in which we live. A people ought to be ready to make great material sacrifices in order to create an understanding of deep and clean human fraternity, which is a high ideal of the spirit and to dissolve the hardness which permits it to contemplate insensibly the misery of others, because to dissolve this hardness is a high ideal of the spirit; and to give root to attitudes that lead man to be more creative than acquisitive, which is a high ideal of the spirit; and to destroy bitterness of race, language, and culture, because to destroy them is a high ideal of the spirit. But a people cannot make such sacrifices for a concept of diminishing validity, plagued by the germs of hatred and violence because this ailment is not a high ideal of the spirit. Quite on the contrary, it is a high ideal of the spirit to contribute to its cure.

I know that this people of ours, in its humble masses, and in its leaders in all fields of thought, if it persists in creating solutions, will create solutions. That to which it cannot resign itself is to put aside its creative capacity and to feel that it is forever enslaved in its understanding by a banal dilemma under the terms of which it is obliged to believe that there are only two doors through which it can go out to meet its future, even if both are mined with destruction. To this it could be said by a habitually superficial school of thought that it is better to go out one of the two doors, even though they are mined, than not to go out at all. The answer to this is that nobody speaks of not going out. Does man perchance not know how to open doors where there are none? Is it not his duty to himself to look for ways of opening new ones when those that there are may be mined for his destruction? Is it not the essence of liberty to have the power to choose from among alternatives? And if intelligence multiplies the alternatives, is it not in that way widening liberty? The people always can, in choosing among many, old and new alternatives, decide for one of the old with the same freedom as for one of the new.

That which I have said so far, although in part it widens consideration of the theme by giving it a background of world in crisis, on the other hand has limited it to the mere political nature of status. A political status, of course, does not exist in an economic vacuum. Thinking on the political status cannot be developed in a vacuum of economic or cultural thought. Ways of living and working; the forward-looking habits in a community; the religious vision; the land and its crops, and the factories, and the tools, and the techniques, and the raising of children, and the cultivation of the understanding, and science, and art, and recreation, and health habits, and sustenance, and clothes, and sheltering roof, and justice, and light, and generosity and serenity—all these together, and their political status, and more—are the life of a people. The manner of expressing all these together in harmony is the ideal of life of a people. And the spontaneity and dynamism with which they are expressed constitute the people's integral liberty. It is on the basis of this conviction, that I have said before today that we must exercise responsible care in not risking unnecessarily many components of liberty by a fixation on only one of its components.

Of course, certain aspects of integral liberty are closely related to the possibility or impossibility of other aspects. If a community does not develop an economy which is founded, or has hopes of being founded, on a victorious productive effort, it will see other forms of its life and liberty impeded, or decayed, or destroyed. From this comes our great dedication, which we should further strengthen on this day, to the task of constantly increasing production in Puerto Rico—more rapidly than the growth in population; more rapidly still to absorb unemployment; more rapidly still to go on raising the standard of living and security; and more rapidly still so that present imperative necessity for aid shall not become permanent. And I want to say here, most emphatically, that sweatshop labor is definitely not one of the incentives we provide for new investments in industrial development. The production program is for the people. The workers form the largest part of the people. One of the basic necessities of all the people is a decent standard of living for the workers who are the majority of the people.

Tax exemption for 12 years for new industries is a counterbalance to factors which initially are adverse, such as the distance at which many raw materials are found, and the natural disadvantages inherent in all periods of apprenticeship in an agricultural economy which needs, in order to survive, to convert itself into an industrial economy.

I do not wish to close without paying tribute—and let us all pay tribute on this day—to a man great in spirit, strong in humility, who in his austere administration has aided the new form of government to begin auspiciously today. I refer to Jesús Piñero.

Neither do I wish to end without the expression of my most profound respect for the common man of Puerto Rico who has known how, beset by hardship and suffering, to establish with his vote a government that has not offered him sweets or marvels, but to lead him honestly along the difficult uphill road.

STEEL SUPPLIES—EDITORIAL FROM LONDON TIMES

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an editorial from the London Times of January 13, 1949, headed "Steel supplies." In view of the fact that the nationalization program has gone a long way in Britain, and that the steel industry is one of the few major industries which have not been nationalized, I believe that Members of the Senate will find this editorial of extreme interest, particularly in view of the President's recent proposal to start putting the United States Government in the steel business.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STEEL SUPPLIES

Over a year ago, when the target for the steel industry's output was set at 14,000,000 tons in 12 months, it was believed by some observers that the adaptability and vigor shown by the industry's achievements in the autumn of 1947 and the scope for further adaptations made it reasonable to lock for an output of 15 million tons. Actual output in the year, which has now been announced, was 14,877,000 tons. It is an impressive achievement, far above any earlier output in the British industry, and reflecting an important advance in output a man over the best results before the war. How this contrasts with the experience of coal mining needs no underlining. The estimates on which the low initial target was based probably took too cautious a view of the amount of old iron and steel scrap which could be got either from home sources or from imports for resmelting into steel. The scrap bought in the year exceeded forecasts by 800,000 tons, and not all of this was used; stocks, which had been drawn upon heavily in 1947, have now recovered by about 130,000 tons. How the consumption of pig iron in steel making compared with the plan is not published. Pig-iron output, while only a little higher than the estimate, was almost 1,500,000 tons above the 1947 figure, and of this about a million tons went into steel.

Steel output this year could be bigger still, if the flow of raw materials allows it. During the past year there has been growing appreciation of the desirability in present circumstances, with exceptionally high costs for wholly new plants and an immediate and urgent need for increased supplies, of making the most of existing facilities and of raising production by relatively small but quick adaptations of plants and processes. The determining factor will almost certainly be the supply of pig iron. More and better coke is indispensable, and this may well prove to be the weakest link in the chain of supply. Although imports of iron ore are larger than ever before, the cheap lower-grade home ores are now considerably less used than during the war, and there is no serious reason to suppose that the supply of ore need set any sharp limit to output. In wartime home ores were often transported longer distances than their value might justify in peacetime, but their value in comparison with imported ores is greater than was commonly estimated. Forecasts just after the war frequently expressed the hope that imported ores might come down in cost to about 30s. a ton at the ports here, but in fact they are now costing 56s. a ton.

The prospective demand for steel is more difficult to estimate than the supply. There have been many signs in the past year that the margin of unsatisfied demand is smaller than has been thought. Stocks in general seemed to be growing more rapidly than consumption. Some users were certainly building up abnormally large quantities of the kinds of steel most difficult to get. It was freely admitted early in the year that duplicate orders were placed with different steel suppliers as an insurance; and by the end of the year some steel users were being asked to place orders. Some requirements—for example, for locomotives and railway wagons—have been found to be much exaggerated; and stocks of steel at coal mines are believed to have reached unprecedented levels. Some industries, on the other hand, notably shipbuilding, had much less steel than they could use; and shipbuilders were critical of the stockbuilding and hoarding, as they conceived it, of other users of steel. Here again, however, it may be that if the shipbuilders were able to finish and deliver ships more quickly the apparent pressure of demand for new ships might be seen to be slackening.

Certainly there is some reason to suspect that the demand for steel is now more nearly satisfied than appears on the surface. This is an issue in the United States as well as in this country. One significant factor in the demand for steel receives far less notice than it should. There is little doubt that the same amount of finished articles which is obtained from the present output of steel could be got from an appreciably smaller tonnage of steel if methods and technique could be further improved. The qualities of steel could be more fully utilized if designs could be changed by discarding unnecessary safety factors which made no allowance for improvements in the manufacture of standard steels over the last 30 years, and if the more costly high-tensile steels could be used more extensively. In the war there were important advances in these directions, but there was also great resistance among some users. Since the war there has actually been some falling away; and it is unfortunate that, partly for political reasons, steel prices have been kept below costs, because this policy removes one of the most powerful correctives—the corrective of cost—to the carefree use of scarce materials. The savings which could be obtained by a better use of steel and the use of better steels are considerable, and, since this country is bound to be increasingly at a disadvantage in raw materials, economy in their use is a national necessity.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, today is the two hundred and forty-third anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin. As a Senator from the State where Franklin was born and passed his early boyhood, I am glad to join on his birthday in commemorating his many services to his country and to the advancement of the happiness and welfare of people all over the world.

Our only regret in Boston is that Franklin left so soon for Philadelphia. While Boston's place in early American history is large and solid, much would be added to its glory had Franklin stayed there long enough to accomplish some of the many outstanding feats which have established him in the eyes of many historians as our greatest American.

Franklin left Boston as a boy of 17 and traveled to Philadelphia by water in October 1723. There he built, by intelligence, concentrated study, and long hours of work, a career whose glory is so bright as still to cast continuing reflections throughout the civilized world. Certainly few, if any men, have combined in one personality so many qualities of greatness as did Benjamin Franklin—statesman, diplomatist, scientist, author, inventor, printer, philosopher, philanthropist, and educator. He was preeminent in his time in all of these fields.

Today, as we honor him, we pay homage to a man whose greatness still grows, whose genius and intellect still serve his country and the world generally. A recent example of that homage is the opening of 36 Craven Street, the last surviving house in London in which he lived, as a permanent shrine to him.

Franklin's part in building the foundation of our Nation is so vast that it is impossible briefly to begin to scratch beneath the surface which time has laid upon it. But we cannot fail to recall his great service in helping to frame the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. Nor can we ignore the continuing dividends we all receive from such institutions as the University of Pennsylvania, which he founded, and the Franklin Institute, for which his philanthropy was responsible.

As a philosopher he has provided the foundation for many of the ideas which are today still spurring us onward to develop a happier, more peaceful and secure world. We do well to remember his words:

> God grant that not only the love of liberty, but a thorough knowledge of the rights of man may pervade all the nations of the earth, so that a philosopher may set his foot anywhere and say, "This is my country."

At one time, it seems to me, we were nearer that objective which Franklin so clearly expressed than we are today. Had we attained that goal of Franklin's, we would not now be spending some $32,000,000,000 annually for past wars, the future security of our country, and living up to our responsibilities in many parts of the world. If our citizens could move about the world more freely, we would not feel that our security so much depended upon retaining under arms such a large number of our youthful citizens. We would not feel the need of concentrating so much of our capacities toward producing weapons to provide us with the best possible defense. We might not sense the vast difference between the varying ideologies in the world that we see today.

As a philosopher, Franklin visualized the enhancement of human rights so dear to him and so desired by all of us today, 200 years later. In a letter in 1780 to a friend of his, Joseph Priestly, the English chemist and early Unitarian, he said:

> The rapid progress true science now makes occasions my regretting sometimes that I was born so soon. It is impossible to imagine the height to which may be carried, in a thousand years, the power of man over matter. * * * Oh, that moral science were in as fair a way of improvement, that men would cease to be wolves to one another and that human beings would at length learn what they now improperly call humanity.

We have truly advanced far in the field of science and social services since Franklin's day, but we still have far to go before we reach that stage where men can settle their differences peacefully and without feeling the necessity of personal attack upon one another. But our spirit of optimism in making progress toward a peaceful world must always remain with us, as that spirit always remained one of Franklin's outstanding qualities.

In this connection truly we can learn today from one of his fables. In it he said:

> Has not the famous political fable of the snake with two heads and one body some useful instruction contained in it? She was going to a brook for a drink and on her way was to pass through a hedge, a twig of which opposed her direct course. One head chose to go on the right side of the twig, the other on the left; so that time was spent in the contest, and before the decision was completed, the poor snake died of thirst.

That fable emphasizes to us the continuing need for us here in the United States and those in other nations of the world to get together and to work toward a lasting peace in order that the many benefits that we still feel accruing from the genius of Franklin can have their full and lasting effect upon us, and we can derive the maximum benefit from the goals of science for which he, over two centuries ago, laid so skillfully the foundations.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania very much appreciates the fine tribute paid to Benjamin Franklin by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL]. As he has said, today is the two hundred and forty-third anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin, illustrious patriot of American freedom, vigorous advocate of human liberty, and first citizen of Pennsylvania.

It is almost impossible to recall a single step in the progress of mankind that was not given impetus by his all-embracing genius.

Volumes have been written about his amazing career. He was the foremost scientist of his time. His success as a diplomat contributed vastly to victory for American independence. His public service strengthened the young Republic in the early struggles of its formative years.

As a philosopher, author, publisher, businessman, and politician he worked unceasingly to advance the welfare of his fellow citizens, and all the world.

One outstanding feature in the greatness of Benjamin Franklin was his unlimited faith in the capacity of man for self-government. His steadfast devotion to individual liberty is worthy of study and emulation in these days of crisis when human rights have been swept away, in many parts of the world, by aggression and tyranny.

Franklin's own words express most eloquently his hope for a world of freemen at peace with each other.

"God grant," he wrote, "that not only the love of liberty but a thorough knowledge of the rights of man may pervade all the nations of the earth, so that a philosopher may set foot anywhere on its surface and say, 'This is my country.'"

Mr. President, another excerpt from Franklin's writings is most appropriate for solemn reflection at this time.

There is a profound lesson for every American in Franklin's words:

> They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety.

These are words of warning. If we fail to give them proper heed, we may find ourselves deprived of liberty, or safety, or both.

Unfortunately among a large element of our citizenship there is a disposition to hold lightly the sacred liberties that we enjoy under the American system of government. There is a tendency toward reliance upon government, rather than one's own initiative and enterprise, for security and well-being.

There is a growing trend toward surrendering to bureaucratic government many of the liberties, rights, and privileges that Franklin and the founding fathers rightfully insisted were the most precious possession of the people.

The record of history has demonstrated convincingly the wisdom of the framers of our Constitution. They were gravely concerned with the dangers that would inevitably arise from a government that would be the master and not the servant of the people. They were determined to establish safeguards against encroachment upon the liberties of the citizens by an all-powerful central government.

Their primary objective was to limit the powers of government over the lives of free men. The Bill of Rights was added because it was considered imperative to state explicitly the rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

In their wisdom and vision they foresaw clearly the dangers of big government.

Today we are confronted with proposals which—if adopted in their entirety—would defeat the principles of individual liberty to which the founders of our Nation were passionately devoted. Many of these proposals and recommendations are based upon socialistic theories which have failed in every part of the world where they have been attempted.

In many instances the doctrine of control by the Federal Government is made palatable to the people by sugar-coating it as social legislation. The promise of an easy way of life is held out to divert attention from the costs involved and the increased burden of taxation which must be imposed upon the people. The hope of security is advanced to overshadow the sacrifice of the greater boon of liberty and individual freedom under which all American progress has been achieved.

As I study the recent message of the President of the United States on the state of the Union, I cannot escape recalling the warning which has come down to us from Benjamin Franklin. If we are to deserve liberty and safety, we must not give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety or security.

Franklin would have been the first to point out that the fruits of individual effort, self-reliance, and thrift, are the basis of our national greatness and prosperity. He would have warned that dependence upon an all-powerful government to provide for every need would mean giving up our essential liberty.

Mr. President, I should like to recall an incident of the closing day of the Constitutional Convention, as recorded by James Madison. The delegates had completed their labors, which held so much significance to the future of the United States. The last members of the Convention were signing the document when Dr. Franklin—looking toward the President's chair, on the back of which a sun happened to be painted—remarked upon the difficulty of distinguishing between a rising and a setting sun.

I have—

Said he—> often and often in the course of the session—and the vicissitudes of my hopes and fears as to its issue—looked at that behind the President without being able to tell whether it was rising or setting. But now, at length, I have the happiness to know that it is a rising and not a setting sun.

The rising sun of freedom—as observed by Benjamin Franklin on that historic occasion—has guided America to its powerful place among the nations of the world.

Chaos and destruction have been the tragic fate of nations where the people have surrendered freedom in the hope of achieving security.

From many centers of pressure and propaganda we are constantly bombarded with a philosophy that would destroy the principles of American freedom. I am deeply alarmed over the growing acceptance of that philosophy. Under its teachings we find ourselves drifting away from the time-honored lessons of history and the wisdom of Benjamin Franklin. Unless this course is checked, we may, in the not too distant future, find ourselves face to face with the same disasters that have overtaken many great nations which were led in socialistic experimentation.

Only by preserving—with true loyalty, honesty, and courage—the principles set forth in the Declaration of Independence and by unswerving allegiance to the Constitution and the Bill of Rights can we hope to go forward to a better world of freedom, justice, and human progress.

Americans must never forget the philosophy and the teachings of Benjamin Franklin.

NOMINATION OF CARL A. HATCH

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably the nomination of Carl A. Hatch, of New Mexico, to be United States district judge for the district of New Mexico, and request that it be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Carl A. Hatch, of New Mexico, to be United States district judge for the district of New Mexico, vice Hon. Colvin Neblett, retired.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on this morning it was my privilege and my pleasure to call a special meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary, and at that meeting I presented to the committee the nomination of former Senator Carl A. Hatch to be district judge for the district of New Mexico. The committee waived the rule which requires notice to be given for a period of 1 week, and unanimously recommended that the nomination of Carl Hatch be confirmed by the Senate.

It is now my pleasure to present that report and to say a few words about Senator Hatch.

Senator Hatch came to this body some 15½ years ago, shortly after the senior Senator from Nevada came to this body. Since that time he has demonstrated a fine knowledge of the law, a fine conception of justice, and, above all, a splendid understanding of Americanism.

Senator Hatch came from New Mexico to the Senate, after having served on the bench of that State and having served in other official capacities with honor and distinction to himself. He will return to the State of New Mexico by the endorsement of this body and the appointment of the President of the United States, to occupy the Federal bench there, in which position his colleagues here believe he will fill the place with honor and distinction to himself, as he has filled his place here in the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be considered and acted upon at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—although, as the acting minority leader, I shall not object—let me say that Senator Hatch was a colleague of ours, and I understand that the procedure requested has been adopted many times in the Senate when a colleague has been appointed to a judicial position. I have heard of no objection from any Member of the Senate on this side of the aisle. I understand from the Senator from Nevada that the report of the committee is unanimous. Therefore, I shall not object.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, of course I shall not object. I wish to have quick action taken on the nomination.

I desire to thank the committee for acting so promptly on the nomination of our former colleague. Suffice it for me to say "Amen" to everything the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] has stated about by former colleague. We in New Mexico are proud of Carl Hatch, and his nomination has been received with the most popular approval of any nomination I can recall. I know he will make good in New Mexico. We wish to thank the President of the United States for having such confidence in Carl Hatch and appointing him to the high office of Federal judge in New Mexico. He will not be a disappointment to anyone, and we wish him Godspeed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration, as in executive session, of the nomination of former Senator Hatch to be United States district judge for the district of New Mexico?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in executive session, proceeded to consider the nomination.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word before the nomination is acted upon. I congratulate the former Senator from New Mexico upon his appointment to the bench, I congratulate the President upon his selection, and I congratulate the judicial district over which he will preside. It is a matter of regret of course that we are losing Senator Hatch from the Senate. He had become prior to his retirement an influential, alert, penetrating, industrious Member of this body. He was a great legislator, in the real sense of the word. The only consolation for his loss is that we gain in his stead an outstanding citizen of New Mexico of long and varied experience to take his place. I shall not hesitate or cease to miss Senator Hatch here, his wise counsel, his level-headedness, his common sense, his knowledge of the legislative process, and his knowledge of the law. I wish for him a long and distinguished career upon the bench.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, when the Senate is considering Senator Hatch's nomination for this important office I cannot let the opportunity pass without saying a word because of my very happy association with him during the past few years, and especially the past 2 years on the Foreign Relations Committee.

It was my privilege to serve with Senator Hatch on a committee that went abroad a year ago, and to enjoy the intimate acquaintance with him that comes when friends travel together in a common purpose to try to promote the welfare of their country. It is a great regret to me personally, without reflecting on his distinguished successor, that Mr. Hatch did not remain in the Senate as one of our colleagues. But it is with the greatest pleasure that I rise to support the immediate confirmation of his nomination, and to express to him, here, to my full ability, my best wishes for the greatest possible success and for his happiness in the new work he is about to undertake in high judicial capacity.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, coming from the neighboring State of Colorado, I should like to say that my association with Senator Hatch has convinced me of his great abilities as a lawyer and his quality of fair-mindedness. I believe he will be an ornament to the Federal bench.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words before the nomination of former Senator Hatch is confirmed. It has been my privilege, and it has been a privilege in every sense of the word, to serve with this distinguished American, whose name is now before the Senate for confirmation as United States district judge, during the entire period of his service in this body. For some time we were desk mates, occupying seats across the aisle from each other. I am of course happy to see him realize his ambition to return to the judicial branch of the Government, which he left when he came to the Senate; but my pleasure is tempered with a knowledge of the loss that this legislative body will suffer by reason of his departure. I say that, Mr. President, of course, with appreciation of the fact that the State of New Mexico has sent a distinguished and outstanding American to succeed him. Carl Hatch possesses peculiar qualities of character that are very seldom found in men. He was my idea of a true liberal. He believed in social progress, but he did not believe in social progress as an end to political expediency. He would never have bent his knee to accede to the demands of groups that, in the guise of social progress, insist upon change for mere selfish advantage. Both clamor of numbers and political threats fell upon deaf ears when directed at Carl Hatch.

In his service here he was an independent thinker, and he possessed the courage when he arrived at a decision to do what he thought was right without regard to politics. I doubt if the question of political advantage ever entered his mind in the performance of any official act. In his leave taking of this body, the loss of the Senate will be the gain of the judiciary. He is an unusually able lawyer. He has a fine conception of the philosophy of our republican form of government, and of the Constitution of the United States as a charter of the liberties of all who live beneath our flag. The people of his beloved State of New Mexico are to be congratulated upon having him to serve them as a district judge. I profoundly regret that his great ability, his judicial temperament, and his determination to do that which he thinks is right will not be at the service of all the people of this Nation.

Carl A. Hatch would be an ornament to any bench and his presence would add strength to the highest court in the land.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I concur in the encomiums that have been passed upon former Senator Hatch, now an appointee to the Federal judiciary. The reason I take the floor for a moment is that I served with Senator Hatch on the Committee on the Judiciary, and I there learned that he is a very profound lawyer. He has a grasp of legal principles which I greatly admire. I shall not discuss his general attitude in the Senate; all Senators who served with him are familiar with that; but I wanted particularly to stress his great knowledge of the law and his fine judicial mind, which I observed not only on the floor but in the intimate contacts on the Committee on the Judiciary, where we considered a great variety of legislation upon a vast number of public questions. I consider him one of the finest legal minds we have had in the Senate for some years. I have a high personal regard for Senator Hatch, and I think the judiciary is the gainer by his assumption of the duties of that responsible position. I wish him well.

To his distinguished successor I may say, of course, we are all pleased to have him here with us. We are sure that he will have a career of usefulness and efficiency to the Government and to the people of New Mexico.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I would not attempt to compress into a few seconds a statement of the affection and esteem I have for a man whom I have known for 30 years, who has been my personal and political friend for a quarter of a century. I merely want to say that the people of New Mexico are thankful to the President for the nomination he has made, and particularly thankful to the Senate for its courtesy in permitting that nomination to come up for immediate confirmation. Senator Hatch, in the 15 years he was here, became an expert in the field of election reform, and a keen student of international affairs; but I am sure the Members here remember him best as a fine, amiable friend. I am deeply grateful to the Members of the Senate for permitting his nomination to come before it at once.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with those who have said a word in commendation of Senator Hatch. His personal touch and his understanding of the law will make him one of the outstanding judges in the Nation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was unanimously confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith of the confirmation of the nomination.

AUTHORIZATION FOR RECEIPT OF MESSAGES AND SIGNATURE OF BILL AND RESOLUTION

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am about to move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the motion is made, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary be authorized to receive messages from the House subsequent to the adjournment of the Senate today, and that the President pro tempore be authorized to sign S. 103 and Senate Joint Resolution 16—the salary increase and holiday measures, respectively—in the event they are passed by the House without amendment and found truly enrolled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM FOR TUESDAY AND DAYS FOLLOWING

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, before the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] makes the motion to adjourn, I should like to ask him what the plans are for tomorrow, or for the day to which it is now proposed to adjourn, in order that we may have the statement in the RECORD so all Members may be fully informed.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, it is my understanding that on tomorrow it is proposed that the Senate consider the nomination submitted by the President of Mr. Dean Acheson to be Secretary of State.

There will also come over from the House tomorrow a joint resolution the purpose of which is to exempt from taxation the moneys paid for certain tickets of admission in connection with the inauguration. That measure will perhaps be handled by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. Aside from those two matters, I know of nothing that will be considered by the Senate at that time. Following that, I believe it is the plan to adjourn until Thursday, probably until 11:30 or 11:45, at which time the Senate will convene and proceed in a body to the inaugural stand.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if I may interrupt, I wish to say that the adjournment over from Tuesday to Thursday will depend on whether there is any business left over from tomorrow which ought to be handled on Wednesday.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Kentucky is correct.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Then, as I understand, there will be no business on Wednesday unless there is something left over from tomorrow, and there will be no business transacted in the Senate on Thursday.

Mr. LUCAS. There will be no business on Thursday, except the meeting of the Senate for the purpose of marching in a body to the inaugural stand.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. And that will be at 11:30.

Mr. LUCAS. That will be at 11:30.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I thank the Senator.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION OF CERTAIN INAUGURAL TICKETS

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have House Joint Resolution 85 held at the desk in the event it is transmitted from the House today. I have canvassed all members of the committee respecting the joint resolution, and there is no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 18, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 17, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Jacob S. Payton, D. D., of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, we acknowledge with gratitude Thy innumerable mercies. Here on the threshold of another week we would dedicate ourselves only to such objectives as have Thy approval. Illumine the minds of these Thy servants that they may oppose real rather than fictitious evils. May the moral obligations that unite them have priority over all prejudices that may seek to divide them. So this day may those who labor within these walls, strive to make America strong through the might that comes through justice, and durable through Thy truth that cannot be shaken. This we pray in the name of Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 13, 1949, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 103. An act to increase rates of compensation of the President, Vice President, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and

S. J. Res. 16. Joint resolution making January 20 and 21, 1949, holidays for Federal employees and employees of the District of Columbia in the metropolitan area of the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution (S. Res. 26):

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the following joint committees of Congress:

Joint Committee on Printing: Mr. Hayden, of Arizona; Mr. Hunt, of Wyoming; Mr. Jenner, of Indiana.

Joint Committee of Congress on the Library: Mr. Hayden, of Arizona; Mr. Green, of Rhode Island; Mr. Long, of Louisiana; Mr. Ives, of New York; Mr. Lodge, of Massachusetts.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN JAMES

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, today marks the anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin, one of the greatest men that ever lived. We, in Pennsylvania, delight to do him honor. As a Governor of our great Commonwealth, and a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and as a member of the Constitutional Convention, we are proud of this great man who did so much for America and for all the world.

Mr. Speaker, we are honored today in that we have in our Pennsylvania Republican delegation the man who has succeeded him as president of the Franklin Printing Co., the Honorable BENJAMIN FRANKLIN JAMES, of Pennsylvania.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEARNEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

ONE-MINUTE SPEECHES

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make an announcement.

It has been the policy for some years now that when there is a legislative program for the day the so-called 1-minute speeches that contain more than 300 words will be put in the RECORD after the business of the day or in the Appendix of the RECORD. The Chair trusts that Members will regard this agreement that we have had for quite a while.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

[Mr. BURDICK addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICH and Mr. HÉBERT asked and were given permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BRYSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two particulars and include in each an editorial.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include certain excerpts.

Mr. BIEMILLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include a speech by the Secretary of Labor, Hon. Maurice Tobin.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include in one an editorial that appeared in yesterday's Sunday Post and in the other a radio address he delivered over Station WMEX.

WASHINGTON HOTEL RATES

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Speaker, an article appearing in the Evening Star of Friday, the 14th, states that while certain hotels in Washington have increased their rates to double or more for the period of the inauguration that at least three in the strategic downtown area have not increased their rates at all. These are the Mayflower, the Carlton, and the Occidental—there may be others. The managers of these fine hotels are to be commended for their spirit of fairness and hospitality.

I am sorry to note that some of the hotels have refused to reveal their rates to newspaper reporters. All the Washington hotels should fully disclose to the public through the press what their rates are for the period of the inauguration. And if they feel such rates are justified they should state their reasons.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LODGE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include some extraneous material.

IMMIGRATION FROM ITALY

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, today I have reintroduced a bill similar to one which I introduced during the Eightieth Congress. This bill provides that the annual immigration quotas for Italy for the fiscal years 1950 and 1951 shall be increased by an amount equal to the unused Italian quotas for the past 10 years. If this bill becomes law, the number of Italians who would be admitted to this country during the next 2 years would be 36,709.

Mr. Speaker, the United States has sought to help Italy to recover from the ravages and devastation of war. The United States has, since the end of the war, spent upwards of $2,000,000,000 to rehabilitate Italy.

We know that the course of events in Italy has a sharp and significant impact upon the economy and national security of the United States and upon the peace of the world. We know that had the Communists obtained power in the Italian elections on April 18, 1948, western Europe would probably have fallen under the Communist boot and we should have had to convert our Nation into an armed camp.

Mr. Speaker, the Marshall plan, while necessary to the recovery of Italy, does not deal with Italy's major problem which is overpopulation. The optimum population for Italy is approximately 38,000,000 people. Yet today, Italy has a population of between forty-six and forty-seven million and her population is increasing at the rate of some 450,000 a year. Approximately 200,000 additional workers are made available each year.

The problem of overpopulation in Italy is one with which Premier De Gasperi and his government cannot deal with unassisted.

I wrote to the President last August urging him to take the position that Italy's pre-Fascist colonies should be returned to her. These territories could absorb at least a few of Italy's surplus people. In that same letter I urged the President to instruct his representatives to the United Nations to present Italy's demographic problem to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations in order that that body, as well as the International Labor Organization, should help toward its solution.

The passage of this bill is, in my opinion, the very least we can do to help Italy in her time of trial.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mr. John Baer.

Mr. D'EWART asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include two editorials.

Mr. WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Buffalo Evening News of Wednesday, January 12, 1949, in relation to the President's budget message to the Congress.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, following the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of special orders heretofore granted, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GAVIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. FORAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

THE LATE HONORABLE EDWARD L. O'NEILL

Mr. ADDONIZIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ADDONIZIO]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADDONIZIO. Mr. Speaker, it is with genuine sorrow that I inform the House of the death of a former Member of Congress from New Jersey, Edward L. O'Neill, of Newark, on Sunday, December 12 last. Mr. O'Neill died several hours after suffering a heart attack at his home. He was 45 years old.

Mr. O'Neill, a Democrat, represented the Eleventh District of New Jersey from 1936 to 1938, and earned a reputation as a hard-working and conscientious Member. He was named to five House committees, more than any other first-term Member, eventually serving on the Committees for Civil Service; District of Columbia; Education; Coinage, Weights, and Measures; and Claims. He subsequently resigned from those committees, as required by House rules, to become a member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, at that time one of the three major committees in the House. Members of the House who were his colleagues remember Mr. O'Neill's youthful appearance and friendly manner as well as his devotion to duty and capacity for work.

Born in Newark, Mr. O'Neill attended schools in that city and was in private employment for 9 years before embarking upon his career of public service. He made his first political speech before he was 27 at a dinner in honor of William H. Kelly, who was—and still is—chairman of the Essex County Democratic Committee, and he was soon recognized as a young man with a promising future. At 29 he was campaign manager for William L. Wachenfeld in his candidacy for State senator. He was the youngest man ever to receive the support of the county Democratic committee in his first bid for the eleventh congressional seat in 1934. He lost to the Republican incumbent by less than 1 percent of the vote cast in the district, and he was successful against the same candidate in the next election.

Prior to his term in Congress Mr. O'Neill was with the Federal Housing Administration as field representative and mortgage risk examiner, and later was a member of the Essex County Tax Board for 7 years.

The same tireless energy and enthusiasm which characterized Mr. O'Neill's official assignments marked his civic and charitable activities. He was Essex County chairman of the March of Dimes for several years and was planning this year's program at the time of his death. He was long active in the Knights of Columbus and the Holy Name Society and held high offices in these organizations, having been grand knight of the Newark Council of the Knights of Columbus, and vice president of the Essex County Federation of Holy Name Societies.

Mr. O'Neill served in both the naval and military branches of our armed forces. As a youth of 15 he enlisted in the Navy and served 4 years, part of the time with the Asiatic Fleet. In World War II he was commissioned in the Army and was retired on account of physical disability with the rank of captain.

Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Ida Mary Koch O'Neill, a daughter Margaret, and two sisters, Mrs. Margaret Ryan and Mrs. Ann McConnan, of Newark.

I was privileged to know Mr. O'Neill for many years and, as did all who knew him, held him in high regard and esteem. He was a man of integrity and ability, and a warmhearted and sincere friend. He will be long remembered by his numerous friends, by his former colleagues here, and by all who were associated with him in his useful career. He served his city, State, and country with fidelity, and he has left an honorable record of public service. His untimely passing is a deep personal loss to me, and I extend my sincere sympathy to his bereaved family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MULTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. LARCADE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD with reference to the bill H. R. 501 dealing with the merchant marine and to include therein a short newspaper article.

Mr. BARTLETT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. KARST asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an excerpt.

Mr. GORE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Edward B. Smith, which appeared in the Knoxville News-Sentinel.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include two statements from extraneous sources.

Mr. MERROW asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances: in one to include several resolutions introduced by him in the present Congress, and in the other to include an editorial.

Mr. CURTIS asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution passed by the Legislature of Nebraska.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article from Panama.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. JENKINS asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on three separate subjects and to include newspaper articles.

Mr. PATMAN asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and insert copy of an address delivered by Commissioner Freeland on the efforts made to mislead the people on the basing-point system.

Mr. PATMAN also asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks on another subject and include certain statements and excerpts.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 42)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read by the Clerk and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In my recent messages to the Congress I have presented the program which I believe this Government should follow in the months ahead. The magnitude and importance of that program, both at home and abroad, require able leadership and sound management. The Government must have the most effective administrative machinery to carry out its vast responsibilities.

The Congress has recognized these needs by the establishment of the Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government. The recommendations of the Commission, which are soon to be reported to the Congress, may be expected to contribute significantly to our ability to meet the problem before us. To carry out those recommendations and to accomplish other improvements in the Government's complex operations will, however, require further and more detailed steps. Improving the management of the public's business calls for continuing efforts by the Congress, the President, and all agencies of Government.

Throughout my administration I have taken action to effect improvements in the organization and operation of the Government. In 1945 I asked the Congress to enact legislation authorizing permanent changes in administrative structure by the reorganization plan procedure. Under the authority granted by the Reorganization Act of 1945, numerous reorganizations were made which contributed to the efficiency of the Government and its transition from war to peace. The establishment of the permanent Housing and Home Finance Agency was an outstanding example of the improvements thus achieved. I also recommended, and the Congress enacted, a major improvement in the organization of our armed forces by the creation of the National Military Establishment. On matters not requiring legislation I have made program adjustments designed to increase the effectiveness of governmental operations.

It is my firm intention to continue to require, throughout the executive branch, the highest degree of attention to this need for improved management. I expect each department and agency head to consider this a major part of his responsibility. It is essential that they be given the tools for effective management of their agencies. Further, I believe that every official and employee of the Government should feel a personal responsibility for improving the way in which his work is performed.

Increased efficiency and economy in the Government's far-flung activities can be realized only if certain essentials of organization and operation are satisfied. These essentials are not confined to Government. They have proven their effectiveness in the successful operation of large-scale enterprise, both public and private. They are matters on which it is easy to agree in principle but which are often violated in practice.

There must be, first of all, a clear definition of the objectives of public programs. Second, organizational arrangements must be established which are consistent with those objectives and designed to produce responsible and effective administration. Third, qualified personnel must be obtained to administer the programs. Fourth, the methods by which operations are conducted must be constantly reviewed and improved. Fifth, there must be provision for thoroughgoing review and evaluation of operations, by the President and the Congress, to assure that the objectives are being attained. These conditions can be achieved only through teamwork by the President and the Congress in carrying out their respective responsibilities under the Constitution for conducting the affairs of Government.

I have already recommended to the Congress two measures which will help us obtain better government. The enactment of legislation to increase the compensation of the heads and assistant heads of departments and agencies and to revise the Classification Act will greatly assist the Government in securing and holding the services of the best qualified men and women. The appropriation to the President of a special fund of $1,000,000 for management improvement will yield major contributions to the better operation of the Government. It will be used in part for the development and installation of recommendations coming from the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch, and in part for the preliminary expenses incident to the appraisal and trial of other suggested improvements. This fund will in no sense be a substitute for the present day-to-day efforts by all Government agencies to improve the conduct of their operations.

In addition to these steps, I am now recommending that the Congress enact legislation to restore permanently the reorganization procedure temporarily provided by the Reorganization Acts of 1939 and 1945. This procedure is the method of executive-legislative cooperation whereby a reorganization plan submitted to the Congress by the President becomes effective in 60 days unless rejected by both Houses of the Congress.

In a letter to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government has pointed out the need for such a method of reorganization in dealing with many of the changes which it will recommend. I fully agree with the Commission on the necessity of reviving the reorganization plan procedure, which became inoperative on April 1, 1948.

In recommending the enactment of a new reorganization measure, I wish to emphasize three things.

First, the reorganization legislation should be permanent rather than temporary. While the work of the Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government makes such legislation especially timely and essential, the improvement of the organization of the Government is a continuing and never-ending process. Government is a dynamic institution. Its administrative structure cannot be static. As new programs are established and old programs change in character and scope to meet the needs of the Nation, the organization of the executive branch must be adjusted to fit its changing tasks.

The impracticability of solving many problems of organization by the regular legislative process has been frankly recognized for many years by congressional leaders. In many cases changes which are essential cannot attract the necessary legislative attention in competition with the many other matters pressing for congressional action. On the other hand, the reorganization plan affords a method by which action can be initiated and the proposal considered with a minimum consumption of legislative time.

The reorganization-plan procedure is a tested and proven means of dealing with organization problems. Twice within the last 10 years the Congress has authorized this method of reorganization for short periods. Under each of those authorizations many changes were made which added to the efficiency of the executive branch and tended to simplify its administration. The advances made during the brief life of the Reorganization Acts of 1939 and 1945 clearly indicate the desirability of permanent reorganization legislation.

Second, the new reorganization act should be comprehensive in scope; no agency or function of the executive branch should be exempted from its operation. Such exemptions prevent the President and the Congress from deriving the full benefit of the reorganization plan procedure, primarily by precluding action on major organizational problems. A seemingly limited exemption may in fact render an entire needed reorganization affecting numerous agencies and functions wholly impractical. The proper protection against the possibility of unwise reorganization lies, not in the statutory exemption from the reorganization plan procedure, but in the authority of Congress to reject any such plan by simple majority vote of both Houses.

Finally, let me urge early enactment. Under the reorganization procedure, reorganization plans must lie before the Congress for 60 calendar days of continuous session in order to become effective. Unless the necessary legislation is adopted in the early weeks of the session, it obviously will be impossible to make effective use of the reorganization procedure during the present session.

The proper execution of the laws demands a simple, workable method of making organizational adjustments. Without it the efficiency of the Government is impaired and the President is handicapped in performing his functions as Chief Executive. In my judgment permanent legislation to restore the reorganization plan procedure is an essential step toward efficient and economical conduct of the public's business.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 17, 1949.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

[Mr. MARTIN of Iowa addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCRIVNER]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. SCRIVNER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks and include an article entitled "Political Medicine."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. WOODRUFF addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

APPOINTMENT OF HON. FRANK PACE, JR.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, the appointment by President Truman of Mr. Frank Pace, Jr., of Little Rock, Ark., is most commendable. That appointment deserves the plaudits of the American people. Here is a man who came from the bottom to the very top rung of the ladder, by virtue of his tireless energy, ability, and devotion to duty. The President recognized the fine qualities with which he is endued. Arkansas is proud of her native son, Frank Pace, Jr., who joins other Arkansans who occupy high positions of trust and responsibility.

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, Mr. Speaker, and to include an article by Sam Stavisky entitled "Pace Appointment to Budget Bureau Post Fulfills Predictions of Many About Him."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[From the Washington (D. C.) Post of January 8, 1949]

PEOPLE IN THE NEWS

(By Sam Stavisky)

PACE APPOINTMENT TO BUDGET BUREAU POST FULFILLS PREDICTIONS OF MANY ABOUT HIM

The fast pace and friendly face of Frank Pace, Jr., new Director of the Budget Bureau, yesterday carried the 36-year-old Ozarks boy high up on the ladder of Government service—onto a rung near the very top. The lank, limber Arkansan has been marked as a "bright young man" ever since he came to Washington during the war while serving with the Air Transport Command. Folk who met the personable attorney told one another that there was a young man definitely going places. President Truman yesterday made the collective prediction come true.

Back home in Little Rock, big things were long ago prophesied for the 6-foot son of Frank Pace, Sr., prominent Arkansas attorney, one-time law partner of the famed Governor and Senator, Jeff Davis.

The rugged son of mountain pioneers finished high school at 14, polished up at a prep, whizzed through Princeton, strolled through Harvard Law, and came home with his degrees in '36. During the next 6 years Frank served a sort of apprenticeship—in the district attorney's office, in the State revenue department, and in private practice with his dad. The junior Pace spent 4 years in uniform, returning to civilian life in '46 as a major.

Caught Hannegan's eye

Frank went to work with the United States Attorney General's Office as a special assistant, but not for long. His vivacious personality, genial chuckle, and real ability had caught the eye of Postmaster General Frank Hannegan, who appointed the "Arkansawyer" as his executive assistant.

Two years later—January of 1948—Pace stepped up a pace as Assistant Director of the Budget under Jim Webb, another young blood. In the 12 succeeding months, Frank Pace gave up to a large extent two of his great affections, people and golf.

It's been said that Pace, the younger, knows every person in Washington claiming Arkansas as his home or birthplace. He likes people and people like him. He makes friends easily, often influential friends, like Secretary of Treasury John Snyder, Presidential assistant John Steelman, Presidential confidant Les Biffle, to name a few who happen to be from the Ozark country.

As to golf, Pace was a pacesetter who could make 18 holes in the low seventies. The past 2 years in a row he captured the National Press Club crown. He was awarded an Oscar last year for his low score in the national celebrities' golf tournament, sponsored by the Washington Post.

Burned midnight candle

Frank Pace never did lose that easy-breaking smile of his, but he did virtually give up making new friends and influencing new golf balls in his last year with the Budget Bureau. The Arkansas lawyer burned the candle many a night mastering the million and one details that go in preparing the proposed spending of Uncle Sam's billions.

At Princeton, Frank was kind of puny—he stretched out to 6 foot—later. He liked sports, but failed to make a first team. He loved a blonde Pennsylvania beauty named Peggy Jane. He made first team with her. Today they live in a brick house at 5126 Albemarle Street NW., with two young daughters, one flaxen haired like her mother, one dark haired like her father.

Three weeks ago, while working late into the night on the budget the President will send to Congress Monday, Frank felt a sharp pain in his abdomen. He went home feeling bad. By morning he felt worse. He was rushed to the hospital and underwent an emergency operation for acute appendicitis.

So now Pace has to slow up his pace for a while. Looks like he'll have to go back to the 8-hour day.

AMENDMENT TO RULES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a resolution which I am introducing today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, America has never been in more danger from within than she is today.

In my opinion, the House of Representatives made a terrible blunder the other day when it virtually abolished the Rules Committee.

If there ever was a time when we needed that committee functioning as a real Rules Committee, as it was set up by some of the wisest men who ever served in Congress, that time is now.

In order to protect the House, and the country, from a barrage of unwholesome, unnecessary, unreasonable, and unstable legislation, at a time when every effort is being made by the enemies within our gates to take advantage of the opportunity to undermine and destroy this country and to discredit it abroad, we need to keep the Rules Committee intact, and not try to weaken or destroy it.

In order to correct the terrible mistake the House made the other day in adopting a rule that virtually abolished the Rules Committee, I am introducing a resolution to correct that mistake by amending the rules of the House to conform with the rules of the Eightieth Congress in order that we may avoid the disasters which might result if this mistake is not corrected at once.

The resolution referred to follows:

Resolution to amend paragraph (2) (c) of rule XI of the Rules of the House (relating to the Committee on Rules) to read as it read during the Eightieth Congress

Resolved, etc., That paragraph (2) (c) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c) The Committee on Rules shall present to the House reports concerning rules, joint rules, and order of business, within three legislative days of the time when ordered reported by the committee. If such rule or order is not considered immediately, it shall be referred to the calendar and, if not called up by the Member making the report within seven legislative days thereafter, any member of the Rules Committee may call it up as a question of privilege and the Speaker shall recognize any member of the Rules Committee seeking recognition for that purpose. If the Committee on Rules shall make an adverse report on any resolution pending before the committee, providing for an order of business for the consideration by the House of any public bill or joint resolution, on days when it shall be in order to call up motions to discharge committees it shall be in order for any Member of the House to call up for consideration by the House any such adverse report, and it shall be in order to move the adoption by the House of said resolution adversely reported notwithstanding the adverse report of the Committee on Rules, and the Speaker shall recognize the Member seeking recognition for that purpose as a question of the highest privilege."

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce that the Republican conference has unanimously appointed LES ARENDS as Republican whip.

EXEMPTION OF ADMISSION TICKETS FOR CERTAIN INAUGURAL EVENTS FROM THE ADMISSIONS TAX

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 85 to exempt from the tax on admissions amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1949.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. REED of New York. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution (H. J. Res. 85) to exempt from the tax on admissions amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1949.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all amounts paid (whether paid on, before, or after the date of the enactment of this joint resolution) for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1949 shall be exempt from the tax on admissions imposed by section 1700 of the Internal Revenue Code, all the net proceeds from the sale of such tickets to be donated by such committee to charity.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to exempt from taxation under section 1700 of the Internal Revenue Code only those tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on January 20. It is understood that the exemption will only apply to tickets sold to the grandstand to view the inaugural parade, to the inaugural ball, and to the gala concert.

Precedent for this action is the legislation enacted for the inauguration in 1941 as the result of the election of 1940. Similar legislation was enacted as the result of the inauguration in 1933 for the 1932 election, and in 1937 for the 1936 election, and in 1941 for the 1940 election. It was not done in 1945, because of the war, when the inauguration ceremony took place at the White House. There was no exemption at that time because there were no such tickets issued or sold.

It is definitely understood that no one is to profit by this legislation. If there is any profit whatever after expenses incurred by the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies, then that will go to charity. In view of the precedent for such action in every inauguration except 1945, I am surprised that there is objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. Who makes the decision as to which charity the net profit, if any, goes?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Why, the same authority that has made such determinations in the past, as I understand it, the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. It is understood that any surplus above expenses goes to charity and is paid over to the Community Chest which, as you know, includes the Boy Scouts, the Girl Scouts, and various organizations covered under the Community Chest in the city of Washington.

Mr. DOUGHTON. A lot of these tickets have been sold, but the taxes have not been collected, in the expectation of the enactment of legislation following the precedent of similar action taken for every inauguration since 1933. No one will make any profit out of this. It is appropriate that this legislation be enacted.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS. Is it the purpose, if this legislation goes through, to cut the price of the tickets to the people who buy them by the amount of the tax, or to collect the full amount and give it all to the community fund here in Washington?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The tax will just not be collected.

Mr. VORYS. Part of it has been collected; is not that true?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. The tickets that have been sold have been sold without the collection of the tax. None of the money from this will inure to the benefit of any individual. May I say further that the members of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies will themselves have to buy and pay for their own tickets.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee if it is not true that the only way they could get this tax now would be to pay it out of the money that has been received for the tickets? It would be impossible to go back to the ticket purchasers and tax them for it, because who knows who has the tickets?

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is absolutely correct. If you do not pass this resolution, it simply means that an amount of money will have to be taken out of this expense fund, any balance of which goes to charity, to pay for the taxes on the tickets already sold.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the chairman is quite correct that in connection with former inaugurations, from 1933 down to the present time, resolutions identical to this one have been passed with reference to these excise taxes. Of course, during Republican administrations there were no such taxes to be collected. In the first place, taxes had been reduced each year during Republican administrations until less than 2 percent of the people were paying income taxes alone, to say nothing about nonexistent excise taxes. But here we come along with this House Joint Resolution 85, which clearly states its purpose. The statements that have been made with reference to it have been accurate.

Conditions have changed throughout the country since Presidents prior to 1933 were inaugurated. Television was not in operation then. Television now is in operation all over the United States. The result will probably be that the people back home may want to collect money for charity, but admissions will be taxed and not go to charity. They will go to these television shows and it will be a commercial matter, and the home folk will have to pay these taxes.

When this resolution was first brought up here today I objected and asked for a "second" in order to get time for some discussion of this matter. Personally, I do not want to be small about this proposal. I have voted against every kind of tax I possibly could, for the benefit of the people back home, both excise taxes and income taxes. This is a small matter, but what happens? Every time you bring in legislation to pour two or three billion dollars into some rat hole or some boondoggling project, everybody votes for it and thinks nothing of it.

So as I say, I do not want to be small about it, but we were not faced with this situation during our administrations. I wonder what the people back home, the people who collect and administer funds for crippled children, and other people who are raising money for charity by selling tickets for benefits which are taxed—I wonder what they are going to say in the face of the high taxes that now exist when they see this Congress relieving people from admission taxes who are able to travel all the way to Washington to fill inaugural grandstands to see an imperial parade.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, we have before us a question involving the waiving of the admission taxes on the entertainment in connection with the inauguration.

May I say, at the outset, that President Harry S. Truman is the President for all the people of the United States, and as such he is entitled to an inauguration in keeping with the best American traditions. He is the winner in the eyes of all the people. However, neither President Truman nor partisan politics is an issue in this tax matter before us today.

The issue is, Shall the individuals, many of whom are of wealth and political influence, who buy the tickets for the inaugural parade, the inaugural gala, and the inaugural ball pay the same admission tax as everyone else back home pays for their entertainment? It should not involve the Inaugural Committee. The purchasers of the tickets should pay these taxes.

Equality before the law is not just a slogan, it is one of the things that makes up America. If the people back home go to a theater and see a newsreel of these inaugural festivities they will have to pay the regular admission tax. We should keep in mind that movies are the poor peoples' entertainment.

Every 4-H Club fair in America, even though they operate basically for educational purposes, has to deal with this tax. Charitable organizations selling tickets of admission must collect and pay this tax, even though their proceeds go to the most worthy causes.

It is contended that this tax on the inaugural entertainments ought to be waived because the net proceeds will go to some charity. That is not the rule with respect to any other activity or any other community. Admission taxes have to be paid by all other groups, even if there are no net proceeds or in the case where all of their proceeds are given to charity.

This admission tax is high. It is part of our wartime tax system that has not been taken off the people throughout the country. Families who must live on a small income seldom make a long-distance call or send a telegram unless it is absolutely necessary, yet, when they do, they must pay the Federal Treasury a high wartime tax of 25 percent.

The women of America must still pay these high wartime excise taxes on cosmetics and many of the articles they buy in the drug store for the care of their children. There is still a tax on handbags and countless other articles. These taxes are burdensome to the consumer and are exceedingly burdensome to the small businessman involved. The barber and the beautician must still pay an excise tax on the cosmetics they use on their customers. This is a tax on the tools of their trade.

Mr. Speaker, time will not permit me to enumerate all of the burdensome wartime taxes that are still thrust upon the people of the country who do the work of the world and pay the taxes to keep the city of Washington going. This Congress could well be considering ways to cut down the expenses of Government and relieve the tax burden of these people.

Instead or doing something for all the people, we are today asked to waive the tax for a privileged group. My answer to that is a positive no. It should not be done.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, legislation to exempt admission tickets sold on account of inaugural festivities is absurd. This includes tickets to the inaugural ball that are sold at not less than $10 and to only those who are invited. Also tickets to the big gala show by Hollywood actors and musicians the night before the inauguration that cost from $5 to $10, and special seats that cost from $3 to $10 or more, to view the parade.

There is no good reason why people who buy tickets to these activities should not be required to pay taxes. These activities are not really a part of the inaugural ceremonies on Capitol Hill except that the parade to the Capitol does pass in front of reserved seats for which charges are made.

Do not forget the ordinary government worker has no chance to participate in these festivities. They are exclusive except the parade seats, for which, if he wants one, he would have to pay from $3 to $10.

It is estimated the proceeds from these events will amount to more than $250,000, so the Government will lose $50,000 in taxes. People who can pay $10 admission certainly can pay the tax. To say the least, this resolution is discriminatory against a number of nonprofit organizations who are required under the law to pay taxes on entertainment programs sponsored by them, such as the Red Cross, community chest, boys' clubs, and others.

It is pretty difficult to justify the approval of special legislation to exempt tickets costing $5 and $10 each to the big gala show where big Hollywood actors perform, and then charge 20-percent tax admission for the average family to attend a picture show at the local theater, or to attend a concert in his community.

I do not believe the Federal Treasury should be used in this manner to finance these extra events. In my judgment taxes ought to be charged for these dances and shows as the law now provides.

Furthermore, in view of the administration's demand for additional taxes, it it pretty poor precedent that the first tax legislation submitted to this Congress should be to exempt from taxation admission to Hollywood's gala shows, dances, and parades, costing from $5 to $10 per person. I remind you again these are charges for admission to what are termed "extra events" where high prices are charged. This is not good legislation. About the only excuse for this bill is that a precedent was established in 1932. If so, the precedent is not good and ought not, under the circumstances, to be followed by any administration.

I understand that one of the excuses given for this extra legislation is that some of the businessmen in Washington have advanced funds to finance these expensive shows and events to the extent of $200,000, and they want to make sure they get their money back. Of course, there is no objection, except whatever funds are returned should be subject to taxes.

Most of these funds are advanced by hotels, eating houses, and others who will get more than their money back in profits by reason of the tremendous crowds that come to Washington this week. They will also be refunded, as they should be, from the proceeds of the sale of these tickets, so no one is going to lose except the taxpayers to the extent of some $50,000.

It is estimated more than $30,000,000 of extra money will be spent in Washington during the next few days. Why not do the fair thing, the wholesome thing, and let everybody pay a fair share of taxes and not exempt anyone from the provisions of the law.

It will be said if any funds are left over they go to charity. This is not a charity event. My only criticism is that those who are in control of these festivities have seen fit to charge high admissions for the entertainment. Then they ought to pay the regular tax the same as anyone else.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we have elected a President of the United States, and we must all assume responsibility for the things that are going to happen from now on in our country. I want to assist him if I can, in making our country the best place we can to live.

I have been a Member of this House for many years. During the last 15 years I have sat here when the Democratic administration has increased taxes at least 15 times to try to keep up with the amount of money we were spending. I voted for most of those tax measures. It was necessary to keep solvent. I can see no good reason why we should exempt the festivities on this occasion from taxes. It does not make sense to me. I would say the same thing if it were Republican or Democratic President being inaugurated.

I can see that they are going to need every dollar we can raise in taxes to defray the expenses of government. Here we are asking exorbitant prices for the festivities. It is said here, and rightfully so, that most of the people who attend them will come as a result of invitation to a ball at $10 a ticket. Well, if a fellow is able to pay $10 a ticket to go to a ball he is able to pay the tax on it. Back home the fellow who buys a ticket, even though it be for only a dollar, to go to a ball or anything else has to pay a tax on that dollar. Surely those who can afford to go to the President's ball at $10 a throw can afford to pay the tax.

These stands that have been erected all along the parade route are going to cost the Government money. In the end, we have got to foot the bill. The prices range from $3 to $10 a seat. Anyone who buys a seat can afford to pay the tax. A person going to a movie pays 50 cents for a ticket and pays a tax.

The President has already suggested that we devise additional taxes, additional taxes for everything he wants in order to fulfill the requirements of this budget he has suggested to the tune of $41,800,000,000 when he knows we are going to have an income of only $40,980,000,000.

We are going to have a deficit of $873,000,000. The President says nothing of economy. We are inviting a wreck of our Government. He wants you to raise money to take care of that deficit the President has in his budget—here is where you can get the money. Then, why not continue the tax laws we have instead of trying to rebate some of them? I do not follow the philosophy of tax reduction or exemption from taxation. The President's message also showed that in the next year, 1952, he is going to ask for a budget that will be $2,900,000,000 more than he is asking for 1951. That shows that he is going to spend, and spend, and spend to the point that I question very much whether the American people are going to be able to carry on with the great load that will come to them from this spending. Why does not the President talk some of Government economy?

I do not think this is a tax that should be eliminated. This resolution should not pass.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, this proposal to exempt inaugural parade and inaugural ball tickets from taxation is outrageous.

Anyone who can afford to put up $10 for an inaugural ball ticket or from $3 to $10 for an inaugural parade ticket can also well afford to pay the same admissions tax which our people are required to pay when they pass 50 cents or a dollar through the window for a ticket to the movies.

If there ever were a genuine rich man's tax bill, this is it. I would be extremely sympathetic to a legislative suggestion to wipe out altogether the admissions tax on tickets which cost less than $1. Those who can least afford to contribute to the expense of running the Government would thereby be relieved. The effect of the present bill, however, is to give preferred treatment to the very ones who least need it.

The argument is now made that these $10 tickets have already been sold in large numbers without consideration of the fact that an admissions tax had to be paid. My answer to that is: Let the committee or group arranging these festivities pay the admissions' tax out of the proceeds of the take, thereby cutting down the prospective profit, in just exactly the same way which any private group would be required to do if they had committed this same error.

There is considerable irony in the fact that the first three issues to be brought before this Congress are, first, to raise the salaries and expense accounts of the President, Vice President, and Speaker; second, to give Federal employees in Washington a holiday to enjoy the circus atmosphere of the inauguration; and, third, the most brazen of all, to exempt the politicians and comfortably situated citizens, who are this week flocking into Washington, from paying the same tax on the festivities here which everyone else throughout this country pays for their own entertainment. I do not recall that any such issues were presented to the people by the majority in the recent campaign.

There is no justification for this legislation. It should be defeated.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD.]

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, first let me say that I concur in the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS]. He made able argument on behalf of the defeat of this particular measure.

The presence of this measure before us today brings to mind a situation that occurred in my home town not too long ago when some people who were trying to aid a very excellent charity went ahead and sold tickets without full knowledge of the consequences so far as the excise taxes were concerned. I do not recall that particular charity getting through any resolution or action by Congress. It seems to me that if we pass a resolution of this sort we are not playing fair with the very many worth-while charities and organizations in your district and in mine that put on events for the benefit of the children of our respective communities. If we do something of this sort we are selling them and others like them down the river.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCGREGOR].

Mr. MCGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I think the people should know the type of legislation that the new Democrat-controlled Congress is passing. May I reminisce and call to your attention the many speeches that were made by many Democrat candidates for Congress and the Democrat candidate for President, appealing to the American people that the Democrat Party was a party of the common people, and was against those of great wealth. They also charged the Republican Party and the Republican candidates were those who yielded to the demands of special groups, and those of great wealth.

Congress has been in session since January 3 and under the complete domination and control of a Democrat majority, and let us see what constitutes the first three bills presented to us for consideration.

The first bill we have for consideration today is House Joint Resolution 85, to exempt from taxation admissions for inauguration tickets. This legislation would exempt from taxation those who purchase the $10 tickets for the inaugural ball, and also would exempt from tax the $10, and less, tickets to witness the parade. This legislation will exempt from payment of tax the individuals who can afford the expenditure of hundreds of dollars to come to Washington, who can afford to pay $35 for hotel rooms, and can afford to pay $10 for inaugural ball tickets. Yet Mrs. John Doe, who lives in the Seventeenth District of Ohio, or any other district of the United States, who works and sacrifices in order to buy a ticket for a movie once a week, has to pay her tax. This applies to the different school groups who put on plays, that they might purchase uniforms for high-school bands, or to earn money to finance a trip to the great Capital City of the United States for their graduating classes. My friends, those people are not exempt and have to pay tax, yet the first bill passed by the Democrat-controlled Congress is one for the wealthy people who can afford to come to Washington and see their President inaugurated.

The second bill that is coming up today is S. 103, a bill to increase the compensation of the President, whose present salary is $75,000, and which bill would increase the salary to $100,000 a year and would give him $40,000 tax-free expense account, which he does not have to make an accounting for whatsoever.

The third bill, if you please, is Senate Joint Resolution 16, holidays for Federal employees, granting a 4-day holiday to Federal employees in the District of Columbia, including the bureaucrats. A conservative estimate of this cost alone will near several million dollars.

May I call to your attention, Mr. Speaker, all of these bills are brought up under the suspension of the rule, because they are considered so important by the Democrat-controlled Congress that no hearings are held, and all rules must be suspended in order to secure immediate passage.

I am wondering, Mr. Speaker, what some of the Members of this Congress will say to their constituents after they have voted for this "class" legislation, as I know that many of them made statements during the campaign that they were definitely against class legislation, and all people should be given consideration, whether rich or poor.

Remembering the campaign promises made by the Democrat candidates, and comparing them with the actions of the Democrat-controlled Congress today, I feel certain these activities can be adequately described by an old axiom: "Sometimes people's actions speak so loud we cannot hear the words they say."

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, may I ask my friend from Tennessee a question? He says that the tax has not yet been paid. I understand that the tickets have all been sold, according to the papers, and as the law stands now the tax is payable from those who collected for the tickets. So the tax has already been paid and has been included in the purchase price in every instance. Is that not correct?

Mr. COOPER. That point is covered right on the face of the bill.

Mr. VORYS. If you pay $10 for a ticket, the tax has been included in that payment. If a change in the tax law is made the saving will go to the person who bought the ticket, is that correct?

Mr. COOPER. I do not think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. VORYS. Then this bill does not reduce the price to the purchaser at all. I think 10 percent of the amount collected is now due as tax, and by this bill local charities get this 10 percent instead of the Government. I do not think we should support local charities or inaugural shows in this way. The inaugural ceremony at the Capitol is free and open to the public. This was provided by the Eightieth Congress. The elaborate shows, the parade, the gala, the ball, which have been planned to entertain the inaugural crowd, will only be seen by those who can buy tickets; no exception should be made in our tax laws for such shows.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think any of these three bills should be passed today under suspension of the rules. This postelection band-wagon rush, resulting in the inflated inaugural plans now under way, is getting out of hand. We Republicans owe it to the administration and to the country to attempt to keep it within bounds. This is an unpopular task here in Washington this week. Unless we condone poor taste and help to create bad precedents, we will be called poor sports. After all, we are told, this is emergency legislation and involves only a few million dollars. I think some fundamental principles and precedents are involved in this hasty consideration of these three bills. I do not think there should be bipartisan unity on this first emergency program of the Eighty-first Congress.

Next will come the 4-day holiday bill. Remember, it is this bill making the day after the inauguration a holiday which will result in a 4-day holiday this week. The Attorney General has ruled that the President has power to close departments and bureaus whenever he deems proper in the interest of the public service. Obviously, this Friday holiday is not in the interest of the public service. It was described in the Senate as desirable after the night before. I do not think we should authorize a hang-over holiday. The thousands of people coming to the inaugural may want to do business in public offices on Friday; it would be a healthy thing for them to see the departments working instead of loafing. The public business all over the United States should not be subjected by law to a 4-day departmental delay. The thousands of Federal employees who work in my district are not getting such a holiday, but in thousands of instances, their operations will be delayed because they cannot get word from Washington for 4 days. Washington should set an example of working at least 1 day in 4 at the end of this week.

After that will come the salary bill. It may be that the President's expense account should be increased, it may be that we ought to pay our Presidents more in the future. We will have time to take this up and debate it before Thursday. We do not need to rush it through under a gag today. We may be in danger of losing Cabinet officers and bureau chiefs because of low pay. The fact remains that the minority who elected President Truman in November thought they were electing a $75,000 President who wanted the job, not a $150,000 President, with $50,000 exempt from taxes or accounting. When we raised congressional salaries and expenses, we upgraded the office and then ran for it. The people knew they were electing $15,000 Congressmen. We have time before Thursday to deliberate on whether the President, Vice President, and Speaker need more money. There is utterly no danger of our losing these officials because of their pay and expense allowances.

We have all received broad, loud hints that it is poor taste to object to any of these three demands today. Someone ought to remind someone that it may be poor taste to make these demands. The precedents we establish today may make trouble in the future.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, to say that I am amazed at some of the remarks made by certain of my Republican colleagues on this resolution is expressing myself very mildly. The position taken by my friend from New York [Mr. REED] is a very proper one. As I understand it, while he is not opposed to this bill, he is opposed to the principle in it. The other speeches which have been made by Members on the other side are rather farfetched and savor very strongly of poor sportsmanship.

Mr. Speaker, we must remember that all hotel rooms were reserved before November 3 by the Republicans in anticipation of the election of Governor Dewey. We must also remember that the local inaugural committee could not be appointed by either Governor Dewey or President Truman until it was ascertained which one would be elected, despite the fact that the distinguished Governor from New York was very confident of his election. However, the people decided otherwise.

We are therefore faced with a situation where it was impossible for the Congress and the leadership under the stress of business in both the regular and special sessions to pass such a resolution. Probably the better course would have been to have passed a resolution before the election, while the Congress was in session, and have that matter determined. But, it was not passed.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly.

Mr. HALLECK. I wonder if the gentleman would indulge me the right to inquire, if the Eightieth Congress had brought in such a resolution as this last summer before we adjourned, whether or not the gentleman then would have favored it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I certainly would. I said the leadership on both sides. I was not criticizing the leadership of the Eightieth Congress for failure to do this, and I suggest that probably the leadership on both sides overlooked it, and probably it would have been better if we had passed it, but the fact is, we did not.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. Well, I think if our side had won, we would not have had the resolution in here.

Mr. McCORMACK. I will say this much, if your side had won there would have been a resolution in here, and if any Democrat had opposed it, I would personally think that it would have been a small, mean thing to do, and that is my opinion.

Now, what is the situation? The civic-minded businessmen and organizations in Washington have subscribed a $200,000 fund to guarantee the payment of costs in connection with the inaugural ceremonies. When national conventions take place, businessmen and associations do that, whether Democratic or Republican, and in connection with the inaugural ceremonies here the businessmen have done it. The same thing would have been done if Governor Dewey had been elected. Now, they make no gain; there is no profit in it for them. If there is any profit, as I understand, it goes to the Community Chest Federation to be used for charitable purposes. That is my understanding.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS. I wanted to find out as a matter of information whether it is not true that the congressional appropriation all goes for the arrangements out in front of the Capitol for the inaugural ceremonies, and the $250,000 is to be used for stands down on Pennsylvania Avenue; is that right?

Mr. McCORMACK. It is my understanding that the congressional appropriation is confined to the activities here at the Capitol and in connection with the building of stands outside, and that the activities which are performed by the Official Inaugural Committee is a District affair. A joint congressional committee takes care of the activities at the Capitol.

Mr. VORYS. But there is no charge for the use of any of the arrangements provided by the congressional committee; is that correct?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; of course not. Now, I cannot believe that there are many of my Republican friends who are going to vote against this resolution. I am not going to make any political observations except this, that if on election day the fortunes of the political contest had gone the other way, and if a resolution had been offered by the Republican leadership, and if I knew of any Democrat who was going to speak against it, other than in principle, which is a different proposition, because we recognize this is a rare exception, I would do everything within my power to try and persuade the Democratic Member not to do so. I would consider it poor sportsmanship if any Democrat were to oppose the resolution if Governor Dewey had been elected; a resolution offered for the same purpose as this resolution has been offered. I would consider it small on his part to try and make politics out of a resolution of this kind. I am choosing my words very carefully, because I do not want to say anything that would offend the sensibilities of the great majority of the Republican Members who, I am confident, are not going to vote against this resolution.

The observation I am now about to make was contributed to me by my distinguished friend the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] while we were sitting alongside each other, and I want him to get the credit for it, because it is so pertinent and so sound. The gentleman from Tennessee said to me, "Everyone knows that if a Republican had been elected in November there would not have been a voice raised against such a resolution on the Republican side." I agree with that, and that is the way it should be.

I am amazed at the attempts of some of the Republicans—note that I say "some"—to try to create emotionalism and misunderstanding in the minds of some throughout the country on a resolution of this kind. I am constrained to label vigorously such efforts as awfully small and constituting very poor sportsmanship.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution?

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the House divided, and there were—ayes 199, noes 49.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the joint resolution was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MAKING JANUARY 20 AND 21, 1949, HOLIDAYS FOR CERTAIN EMPLOYEES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate Joint Resolution 16.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the several executive departments, independent establishments, and other governmental agencies of the United States, including the legislative and judicial branches, and of the District of Columbia, in the metropolitan area of the District of Columbia shall be closed all day on Thursday, January 20, 1949, Inauguration Day, and on the succeeding day, Friday, January 21, 1949. All employees of such departments, establishments, and agencies and of the District of Columbia in such area, except those who may for special public reasons be required to be on duty on such days by the heads of their respective departments, establishments, or agencies, shall be excused from duty on those days; and such days shall be considered holidays for the purpose of all statutes relating to the compensation and leave of employees of the United States, and of the District of Columbia, employed in such area. For the purposes of this resolution, the term "metropolitan area of the District of Columbia" shall include, in addition to the District of Columbia, Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties, Md.; Arlington and Fairfax Counties, Va.; and the city of Alexandria, Va.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that the majority leadership will not on this occasion charge me with petty partisan politics in an attempt, at least, to protect the record in this particular legislation. Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to the fact that this legislation which involves the pay of some 250,000 Federal employees has not been referred to a committee of this House. If you want to talk of steamroller tactics, or of putting legislation through without any hearings of any kind, here is a fair example:

The first bill that came before the House is to exempt certain groups from the payment of taxes. No. 2 deals with the question of Government employment and the bill was not even referred to a committee, which should have been done. Of course, the answer by the majority is, "We do not have time. We have to hurry this thing through."

There is no good reason why you could not have the members of your committee appointed and have them consider this legislation tomorrow, thus permitting the Committee on Civil Service and Post Office to do what it has a right to do, and that is to go over the bill and hold hearings, if necessary, before it comes to the floor of the House for consideration by this body. Members of the House are entitled, at least, to the benefit of hearings by our committee.

Now, what are you doing? You talk about this great 4-day holiday. Certainly I have no objection to permitting Government employees in this area to attend the inaugural ceremonies, if they have a chance to do so. They should get to attend. But I call your attention to the fact, however, that if they want to go to the gala show they have to pay $5 and $10 a throw and have to be invited besides. Comparatively few will get to attend.

You cannot go to the big dance, because, unless you are invited and have a top place in Government, you will not get to go there. They cannot see the parade unless they can see it from around a corner and other out-of-the-way places because you have already sold the tickets for the good seats for $2.50 to $10 each. They cannot even look at the parade from the Federal buildings along the way unless they are invited to do so by those in charge of those buildings.

Do you think that they are going to be able to watch the parade as they ought to be able to do? Not at all. They go to those buildings by invitation only. They have been so informed. Anyhow, in some way if they have a chance, they may be able to see the parade. From afar off, they might get to look at the inaugural ceremonies. It appears it is the best that could be done by the management. Now then, on top of that you are going to permit them to have this extra holiday and you are going to quit business from Wednesday until the following Monday. Do you know its cost—or is that important? But, anyway, it might interest you at least to know that you have, as I said a moment ago, something over 200,000 employees and it is going to cost this Government over $2,000,000 for that extra day, because these people will be drawing their pay on Friday and will not be working, except those who are going to be required to carry on necessary duties, including the postal employees and some others who are going to stay on the job.

Let me repeat that I do not want to be misunderstood. I think the Inauguration Day should be a holiday. I think every person who can get to Washington ought to be permitted to attend, and I think, too, it is extremely important that Government employees, those so closely associated with the affairs of our Government, ought to have a chance to attend all ceremonies they can and ought especially to have a chance to witness the inauguration of the President.

My contention is that to allow the additional day, being the following day, as a holiday is unnecessary and uncalled for. It results in a closing down of all operations of Government in Washington from Wednesday evening until the following Monday morning.

Now, while you are putting on a 1-day celebration you make 4 days out of it, yet we do not give these folks a chance to do anything except perhaps witness the parade or the ceremonies from some far-distant point.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield.

Mr. VORYS. I understand the Attorney General has ruled that the President has the power to close departments and bureaus "whenever he deems proper in the interest of the public service." Therefore, it would seem that this request for legislation indicates that the President does not deem it in the interest of the public service to close all Government departments.

Mr. REES. Of course not. If they were to have only 1 day, the President would ask for 1 day, and, of course, it would be granted. There would not be any question about that. But why throw in the extra day? Why close all Government bureaus for 4 days in a row? It is going pretty far, especially when it is not necessary.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is it not a fact that Government employees have 30 days' vacation with pay?

Mr. REES. Oh, yes; but that is something else.

Mr. RICH. I am willing to give them this time off, and I think they should have it if we can afford to do it. But if they get 30 days' vacation, why not charge this day up to one of their 30 days so that the taxpayers back home who never get more than a week or two vacation will not have to pay the bill for these fellows to have extra holidays?

Mr. REES. As the distinguished gentleman from New York said, while it seems rather small to talk about it, it is the principle of the thing that I am thinking about. It does not look good. The way money is being spent, of course, $2,000,000 does not seem to amount to very much. This would be a lot of money in my State. The principle of the thing makes the situation worse. Furthermore, I have been informed by a number of employees they would rather work on Friday than to take the extra holiday. I do not see any justification for it, and no case has been made for it.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. I am not opposed to this bill, but it strikes me it is highly discriminatory. This bill would give every employee in the District of Columbia 4 days off with pay. Why should not other people who are working for the Government throughout the United States in all the various installations and field services be given the same benefits as those who are located in the District of Columbia?

Mr. REES. The only reason is because they do not live in this area.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). The gentleman from Kansas has consumed 7 minutes.

Mr. REES. I yield myself one additional minute, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. In cold dollars and cents what will this proposed holiday cost the taxpayers of this country?

Mr. REES. Oh, I do not know but it will be a lot of money. I am just talking about this 1 day off for Federal workers. The extra holiday will cost more than $2,000,000. I do not know what the whole celebration will cost.

Mr. JENNINGS. Would it run into as much as a million dollars?

Mr. REES. Oh, yes; considerably more. The extra day under this bill will cost more than $2,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and I now yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH].

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, in 2 minutes I cannot do justice to this subject.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to register my opposition to the pending resolution which provides for a holiday next Thursday and Friday for the Government employees in the metropolitan area of the District of Columbia. I have yet to hear a sound reason as to why the Government employees should be relieved of their duties for an extra day simply because of an inauguration.

It is agreeable with me that the various Government agencies be closed on Thursday, the day of the inauguration. But there is no reason, none whatsoever, for the following day also being made a holiday. Such a privilege is not being granted those who work in the stores, in private offices, and other enterprises. In this, as in everything else, the administration looks upon Government employees as the favored, privileged group. This is bureaucracy.

As a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I hear again and again from the various officials of the Government who appear before our committee as to how much of a work load their particular bureau or agency must handle. They invariably appeal to us for more funds to meet the need for additional employees to carry the load. Yet it is proposed by this resolution to grant two complete holidays while all the work of the Government supposed to be serving the people stops.

We are living in very serious times. We are faced with many grave problems. There is much to be done. But, judging from all the arrangements that are being made in connection with the inauguration and all the money being spent for it, this is a gala occasion to be known in history as the inaugural circus. Everyone is to have fun at the expense of the taxpayers.

When one thinks about it, the kind of inauguration celebration being prepared by the administration supporters is quite in keeping with the kind of administration we are to have. No one is to care about the costs involved. No one is to care about the work left undone, or the waste involved in an elaborate parade and extravagant parties. To be sure, this inauguration is a gala day for the millions of bureaucrats on the Government pay roll. The President has already indicated by the size of his budget for the next fiscal year that they are secure in their soft jobs and more jobs are to be created. By this bill the administration proposes to give them an extra day to celebrate.

It is perfectly clear that Thursday, January 20, is to be a happy one, calling for 4 days of celebration, for the bureaucrats; but it is a sad day for the taxpayers of the United States. They will realize this more and more in the coming weeks.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman from Massachusetts use some of his time.

Mr. McCORMACK. We have only one speaker. Under such circumstances I think the gentleman from Kansas should exhaust his time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the right to open and close the debate.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, we reserve the balance of our time. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts going to close the debate?

Mr. McCORMACK. We have only one speaker. He will close the debate; yes.

Mr. REES. Then I suggest that the gentleman use his time.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] such of the 20 minutes as he may need.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] made the admission that he had no objection to giving public employees in the city of Washington Thursday off to see and participate in the inaugural ceremonies. I am certain that he agrees with me that the public employees in this city have done a great job; that all during the war they worked overtime long hours and now this is some little modicum of reward to them.

Someone has tried to confuse the issue a little by talking about 4 days off. As a matter of fact and as a matter of right, Saturday and Sunday are not work days in the District of Columbia. Thursday is Inauguration Day, and I am glad he admits that that day should be given to these people. So it leaves the intervening day, Friday, as the only day, the only concession we are actually giving the Federal employees in this city. As a practical matter, when you try to call people back during the midst of any season of celebration, especially when the following day is the regular day off, you are not going to get very much work out of them and there is not going to be a great efficiency in their work.

Lots of people are coming to Washington from all over the country to see this inaugural, and I am happy that they are coming to see Mr. Truman inaugurated. Many people are coming in here who are the relatives and friends of these employees and they want to entertain them and show them the sights of Washington. So I do not see any great harm in what is being done. It is, in fact, a morale builder.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I quite agree with the gentleman that we ought to give them Thursday off. My objection is that the Government employees are getting 30 days' annual leave and 15 days' sick leave, something no other individual I know of in the country enjoys—the two days, Thursday and Friday, should be charged to the 30 days' annual leave. I think that is the sensible thing to do.

Mr. MILLER of California. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that all Government employees do not get that liberal vacation and sick-leave allowance. The people in the postal service only get 15 days' annual leave, but we are going to try to correct that at this session of the Congress.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. I cannot see why we are raising such a lot of fuss about this extra day, because I am quite sure that the country would be better off if we gave the American people a 6 months' breathing spell by letting all the Federal employees take a vacation, from the President on down. I think that would be good for the country.

Mr. MILLER of California. I know that the gentleman has advocated that philosophy when it comes to certain functions of government.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think everyone will agree that if the employees were not given permission to be off Thursday they could not get to their place of employment in the District. At least, very few could. As a matter of fact, automobile traffic will be prohibited to a great extent in the city on Thursday and that of necessity, because of the inaugural ceremonies and the inaugural parade. So from the practical standpoint, if we did nothing, how are they going to get to their work? A few might get through, but it will be impossible for the great majority of them to get through. Therefore, something has to be done on Thursday. Everyone will concede that.

Now, the only question is, Saturday and Sunday being off days, should we in the light of all the circumstances give the employees Friday off? I recognize that Members may honestly disagree as to that. Thursday would be a day on which they would have to stay out of their employment anyway. That is forced upon them because of the conditions that will prevail in the District due to the inaugural and to their inability to get to the various offices and agencies or Departments they are employed in. Saturday and Sunday are holidays. They do not work on those days anyway. So when it is stated that this is a 4-day holiday, it is not a correct statement. In fact, it is only a 1-day holiday. It is simply a matter for the judgment of the various Members.

Mr. RICH. It is two days.

Mr. McCORMACK. On Thursday they could not get to their various departments.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I agree with the gentleman so far as one holiday is concerned. I am for that. But does not the gentleman think that where we allow such a great length of time to Government employees, giving them from 15 to 30 days annually, and our people back home have to pay for this time, we ought to charge this up to that vacation period which they get annually, especially those with 30 days off every year?

Mr. McCORMACK. It is not a holiday. Let us suppose we do nothing.

Mr. RICH. Oh, well, let us do something.

Mr. McCORMACK. The great majority of the employees could not get to their agencies, yet they would have to charge that up against their annual leave when, so far as they are concerned, they would report if they could get through. They cannot get through because of the parade and the other inaugural ceremonies on the streets. The streets will be barricaded to automobile traffic, except to those who have a tag on their automobile. There are very few who have those tags. We do, because we have to have them as Members of the Congress, and there are a few others. So, without regard to any other consideration, we would have to give them Thursday off, otherwise, we would be making them take a day off their annual leave when they would report for duty if they could do so but they cannot report for duty because of the conditions prevailing on that day. They could not get to their agencies. The only matter to be considered is should we give them Friday off, Saturday and Sunday being regular days off?

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. May I say to the gentleman that there is no question about Thursday. That is Inauguration Day. The matter has been stated correctly in that regard. Thursday ought to be a holiday because it is Inauguration Day for the President of the United States. That is understood. We are talking about Friday and that is all there is to it. But it does have to cover 3 days. I am not talking about a 4-day holiday, excepting as it is described in the newspapers. But, that is the way it works out.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is simply a question whether under the circumstances they should be given this day off.

Mr. REES. Friday I am talking about.

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand. It is a question whether there will not be a holiday unless we pass this resolution.

Mr. REES. Except the President could, if he wanted to, by Presidential order, set Thursday as a holiday.

Mr. McCORMACK. That might be so. But, the only question is, whether with Saturday and Sunday off, as they will be off, and Thursday, if you are going to give the Friday off. That is the question involved. As far as I am concerned, it is the proper thing to do under the circumstances, and I think this way, no matter who would have been elected. If the nominee of your party had been elected, I would feel identically the same way.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, will, the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a measure for Federal aid to education. It is certainly a cherished principle and tradition of our American democracy that every child in our Nation have an opportunity for an education that meets commonly accepted standards of adequacy. In a land now blessed with abundance of wealth, with unprecedented prosperity, and with grand possibilities for even greater good fortune, there can be no reasonable excuse for depriving any American child of his right to go to school for at least 180 days a year in a safe and clean schoolhouse and to classes staffed by properly accredited and certified teachers. But the fact is that for several million American children the opportunity for a decent education simply does not exist. This is the basic reason for Federal aid to education.

One may ask immediately, "Why do not the States appropriate enough money for their schools?" The answer is well known.

Some States simply do not have enough taxable resources to produce sufficient revenue for their schools. Most of these States actually are expending for education a relatively larger percentage of their income than are States which with a minimum of effort manage to spend far more than the national average for every child in school. From the statistics on the Federal-aid question, I gather that some States, even though they were to double their expenditures for education, would still fail to provide enough money for the kind of education to which every American child is entitled. Federal aid, therefore, seems to be the only method by which we may correct this situation.

While I am convinced that Federal aid is necessary, I do not want Federal funds to replace State funds in educational finance. Consequently, the measure which I have introduced explicitly stipulates that no State may reduce its present expenditures for education or may it reduce teachers' salaries or may it in any other way shift its responsibility to the Federal Government. Moreover the bill provides that a floor on educational expenditures will be established whereby every child will be assured that a minimum of $50 from local, State, and Federal funds will be available for his education, regardless of the State in which he lives or where he lives in a particular State. I cannot stress too emphatically my conviction that my only reason for advocating Federal aid to education is my interest in every American child.

It is this conviction that has led me to incorporate into my bill a provision often overlooked in other Federal-aid measures. I refer to the provision for services for public- and non-public-school pupils. In my opinion, the Federal Government should be concerned with the welfare of all American children in every American school, public and nonpublic. For this reason my bill carries an appropriation to provide essential school services for public- and non-public-school pupils. The amount is modest—10 percent of the total appropriation of $325,000,000.

It seems to me that this appropriation for services will encourage the States to improve their transportation services, to expand their free textbook programs, and to broaden their school-health services. It is very distressing to find that many school children, forced to walk long distances to school along open highways, are in frequent danger of serious accident as autos and trucks speed past them. It is equally distressing to learn that thousands of children do not derive full benefit from their education simply because they do not have essential supplies and textbooks. In the field of health services, doctors report that children are absent from school frequently because many schools do not have adequate clinical facilities. These are situations which would be corrected at least in part through the proposed bill's appropriation for services.

It should be noted that these services pertain to the welfare of children in both public and nonpublic schools. Regardless of one's convictions about the relative merits of public and nonpublic education, no person reasonably would want to subject any child to traffic hazards, or to deprive him of essential textbooks and health services simply because he happened to attend the nonpublic school of his parents' choice. For this reason, the funds for services are not restricted to public-school children only.

It is important to note that 90 percent of the appropriation will be available exclusively to improve public schools as such; not one penny of this amount will be used for direct or indirect aid to any nonpublic school. Ten percent of the appropriation—approximately $32,000,000—will be available for services. Of this amount approximately 10 percent—about $3,000,000—would be used for nonpublic-school pupils.

Three million dollars is a very small amount when compared with the savings to the Nation's taxpayers from the operation of nonpublic schools, which is in excess of $400,000,000 every year. In other words, if the two and a half million pupils now enrolled in nonpublic schools were suddenly transferred into the public-school system, the total increase to the taxpayers would amount to over $400,000,000, a sum in excess of the total amount authorized in this bill. Moreover, it should be noted that the supporters of the nonpublic school spend well over $200,000,000 a year for their schools. Finally, the replacement value of non-public-school buildings is in excess of $1,000,000,000. In view of these statistics, it would be absurd to say that my bill in any way constitutes a measure to secure support for nonpublic schools.

I do anticipate, however, a number of objections to this measure on the score that aid to non-public-school pupils, particularly those in parochial schools, constitutes a violation of the principle of separation of church and state, that it is a threat to our Nation's public-school system and it is the use of public money for a private purpose. On the first charge the Supreme Court of the United States has rendered a very clear opinion. In the Cochran case involving a Louisiana law authorizing free textbooks for both public- and non-public-school pupils, the Court, in a unanimous decision, declared the law constitutional. In the Everson case decision involving a New Jersey transportation law, the Court declared the statute constitutional. Rendering a majority opinion, Mr. Justice Black said that "It was not the purpose of the first amendment to cut off church schools from services separate and indisputably marked off from the religious function." To my knowledge nobody has challenged the constitutionality of State laws to provide school health services for non-public-school pupils.

The argument that any form of aid to non-public-school pupils is a threat to the American public-school system simply raises the question: Are nonpublic schools really a part of the Nation's school system? In my opinion, they are. Public schools and non-public schools are partners—not competitors—in American education. In full compliance with compulsory education laws parents may send their children to either a public or non-public school. Graduates of both schools are qualified for public office and are subject to military service. I think, therefore, that persons who generally support non-public schools have a perfect right to resent any implication that their schools are un-American or less American than public schools. And this definitely is the implication in the argument that Federal aid for school services to children in such schools is a threat to the American public-school system.

It is also alleged that such aid is the use of public money for a private purpose. I fail to see how the protection of a child's health and welfare can be construed as a private purpose. On the contrary, the State has a duty to afford this protection. To perform this duty public funds must be available for health and welfare services for children in both public and nonpublic schools.

I should not like to see the day when the public schools would have a monopoly of education in the United States. We need both public and nonpublic schools. If we really believe that parents have the right to select one or the other, we should not penalize those parents who choose the nonpublic school.

Yet this is exactly what the State does when it refuses non-public-school pupils bus rides, textbooks, and health services. I do not want the Federal Government to impose a similar penalty. In terms of Federal aid, every child is a citizen of these United States—not just of one State or another. I for one have no intention of relegating non-public-school pupils to a status of second-class citizens.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I just want to inquire, if we pass this resolution, whether there will be any mail delivery at all in that 4-day period?

Mr. MILLER of California. I could not answer that. I believe there will be mail delivery.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. As far as I am personally concerned, I do not think it is a question of who is elected President, nor do I think it is a simple question of creating a 4-day holiday. I think the basic question is whether or not in the interest of public service we can give another day off from the regular duties of these offices. A few days ago I happened to call up one department asking about the progress of a certain program, and they told me that they had a backlog of 2 years in their work, and they gave that as an excuse for not having progressed any further. It occurs to me that the real merit of this proposition is whether or not the public business demands that these people be at their positions on Friday, or if they are not there, charge up the date to their annual leave. They have 26 days annual leave, except those in the Post Office Department. I presume the postal workers will have to work just the same, they will not get this day off, thereby increasing the disparity between them and the other civil employees of the Government. As far as I am personally concerned I feel it is purely a matter of the public welfare. If the work of the different departments is such that they can be spared, well and good, but if not, the employees ought to be at their positions or take the extra day, Friday, out of their annual leave.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the resolution.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INCREASING RATES OF COMPENSATION OF THE PRESIDENT, VICE PRESIDENT, AND SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 103) to increase rates of compensation of the President, Vice President, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) section 102 of title 3 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"COMPENSATION OF THE PRESIDENT

"SEC. 102. The President shall receive in full for his services during the term for which he shall have been elected compensation in the aggregate amount of $100,000 a year, to be paid monthly, and in addition an expense allowance of $50,000 to assist in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which expense allowance no tax liability shall accrue and for which no accounting shall be made by him. He shall be entitled also to the use of the furniture and other effects belonging to the United States and kept in the Executive Mansion."

(b) Section 104 of title 3 of the United States Code (relating to salary of the Vice President) is amended by striking out "$20,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "30,000".

(c) Chapter 2 of title 3 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"EXPENSE ALLOWANCE OF VICE PRESIDENT

"SEC. 111. There shall be paid to the Vice President in equal monthly installments an expense allowance of $10,000 per annum to assist in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which no tax liability shall occur or accounting be made by him."

(d) The matter following the semicolon in section 601 (a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "and the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall be at the rate of $30,000 per annum."

(e) There shall be paid to the Speaker of the House of Representatives in equal monthly installments an expense allowance of $10,000 per annum (which shall be in lieu of the allowance provided by section 601 (b) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended) to assist in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which no tax liability shall occur or accounting be made by him.

(f) The allowance for clerical assistance to the Vice President contained in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1949, at rates of compensation to be fixed by him in multiples of $5 per month, hereby is increased from $32,385 per annum to $45,000 per annum.

SEC. 2. In computing the amount to be deducted from the compensation of any official whose salary is increased under this act for the purposes of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, and in computing the amount of any annuity under such act, any increase in compensation provided by this act shall be disregarded until further act of Congress.

SEC. 3. The provisions of this act shall take effect at noon on January 20, 1949.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Is a second demanded?

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this bill increases the President's salary from $75,000 to $100,000 and gives him $50,000 for expenses. The last time the President's salary was increased was about 40 years ago. There has been no increase in the Presidential salary for close to 40 years. I think that 1909 was the last time that the salary of the President was increased. The President receives by law the use of the White House and its furnishings. He also by basic law is authorized the use of not more than $40,000 annually for travel expenses of the President.

We all know the household expenses of the President are very large by reason of his position as President, no matter who is President, and he should not be expected to maintain those expenses. As I understand, no money is appropriated for the President's household or living expenses. There may be an appropriation to defray the cost of official dinners, but there are many activities in which the President must engage that cannot be charged to such an appropriation, and he has to pay the cost of such activities out of his salary. There is tremendous expense laid upon any man who is President of the United States that arises out of the fact that he is President, and he must pay the cost of such activities out of his own salary.

That, briefly, is the story. This bill increases the President's salary by $25,000 and gives him an expense allowance of $50,000, just as we receive an expense allowance of $2,500. He has to certify for income-tax purposes that he has used it, just as we have to certify that we have incurred $2,500 or more of expenses in connection with our official work in Washington. The President will have to make the same kind of return we do in relation to the amount he will receive as an expense allowance if this bill is passed.

This seems to me to be only a fair proposition. The most pleasing thing about it is that this suggestion of an increase in salary came from a Republican source, from former President Herbert Hoover, not from President Truman himself. To me that is most refreshing. Certainly it is wholesome, and certainly it comes from a man who has undergone himself the experience of living in the White House and knows through actual experience just what are the financial difficulties and the financial responsibilities of the occupant of the White House, the Chief Executive, when he undertakes to carry on the activities of the White House as they should be handled. He is compelled to pay a considerable sum of money out of his own salary and his own personal income.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman permit me to say that while I supported the two resolutions that have just been acted upon by the House, I was not too enthusiastic about them because I think the sooner we can get away from the practice of extending special favors to Federal workers living within the Washington area the better for us. As far as the latter resolution is concerned, I fear that we will in the future be called upon in the interest of uniformity of treatment to do something for the other Federal workers living in the outer areas of the country.

As to the pending resolution, I find myself very strongly in favor of its adoption.

The office of the President is the most important station in the world. That of the Vice Presidency and the Speakership approach it in importance. I feel that the Congress should provide salaries and expense accounts which would enable them to carry on in the fashion that the people of the entire country expect of them. In other words, the Congress in its treatment of this whole question ought to guard the right and to make it possible for a person of moderate means to occupy these high stations.

I hope there will not be a single Member of the House who will oppose the adoption of this resolution. The resolution should be unanimously adopted.

Mr. McCORMACK. Might I say in closing that the argument that the bill should have come out of the committee is a very sound one. I want my friend, the gentleman from Kansas, to understand that. But in the light of present circumstances, where the House is not completely organized, that is impossible. We meet in caucus this afternoon when our committee on committees will make its report to our caucus. Your committee on committees, I understand, have made their report. We have to wait until tomorrow before the members are officially appointed in the House. That is the only time that the committees are officially appointed, so that they could proceed to the consideration of any business. We have to act on this before Thursday. So I recognize thoroughly the weight of the argument made by my friend, and I can assure the gentleman from Kansas, that the leadership on both sides during my years of experience here have given full recognition to it.

But I believe, when I say we have an emergency situation here, where the matter has to be acted on, and the committees could not possibly consider it, that Members will realize the urgency of the situation.

With reference to the first resolution that was adopted this morning, the Committee on Ways and Means was organized and the committee did consider it. It was formally reported out of the committee. But on the last resolution and on this bill we cannot have official action by a committee, because the committees are not in existence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset that I do not want to be misunderstood with respect to this legislation. I realize, as has been suggested by other Members that the President is entitled to a fair and adequate salary and is entitled to a fair and reasonable allowance to take care of necessary expenses for running the White House. The Vice President is entitled to sufficient pay to take care of his living and his expenses. The Speaker of the House I know does have expenses in addition to the ordinary expenses of Members of Congress and he is entitled to consideration in that respect.

I do feel, and by the way I am speaking as ranking minority member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service of the House, that you are rushing through a piece of legislation without giving it the consideration to which it is really entitled. Here you are today, after having been in session since the 3d of January, unable to refer legislation to a committee, so that that legislation could have the fair consideration to which it is entitled.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to my distinguished colleague from Georgia.

Mr. COX. In fairness, does not the gentleman consider the fact that organization of the House has not yet been perfected and that these committees have not as yet been created; and is that not a circumstance that gives justification to this unusual procedure, necessary to effectuate a result that is highly desirable?

Mr. REES. I will tell the gentleman that the whole procedure thus far today to say the least has been very unusual.

Mr. COX. I agree with that. I am not combating the proposition of the gentleman. I say that ordinarily matters of this kind should go to appropriate legislative committees of this House for the consideration and report of those committees, but the pending circumstances are such that would seem to me to justify this unusual and extraordinary procedure which, if the object aimed at is to be attained, must be resorted to.

Mr. REES. I agree with the gentleman from Georgia that in view of the fact that the majority leadership has not yet selected committee members, or at least has not announced them, it is impossible to refer this bill to the committee where it belongs. Of course, you have had 2 weeks during which to select members of the committee. Committee members could be appointed and the bill be considered by the committee tomorrow. Of course, to get the legislation through today, the only thing that can be done is to follow the procedure at hand. I think this procedure is quite unusual, to say the least, and if you keep it up, it could cause a considerable amount of trouble. It is simply a matter of streamlining the legislation that you want to get through right away. The procedure you have followed on these three bills is one that allows, as you know, only 20 minutes discussion from each side on each bill, and the only way by which we can talk about any of these bills for as much as 20 minutes is to demand a second.

I am not objecting to the consideration of this particular piece of legislation. If I had a chance to do so, I would offer to modify it by amendments, but under the rule, I am not in position to do so.

I am not opposed to allowing the President adequate salary and a reasonable expense account. I call your attention, however, to the fact that if the President did not have the exemptions in this bill, it would be necessary to pay him a salary of between $300,000 and $400,000 in order that he might have as much left as provided in this bill.

Going one step further, if we do what the President requested, that is, do away with the community property amendment passed in the last session, you would have to pay him a salary of approximately $500,000 a year. That is, in order to provide a similar income as we have in this legislation. As the distinguished majority leader of the House has said, the President is entitled to a fair salary. I would not be misunderstood on that point for anything in the world.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The President has a terrific job, and it is impossible to pay him the money that the position is worth. It is not done that way. We allow a certain amount. The work cannot be measured in terms of dollars and cents. We all understand that. But I do think that since you are allowing an additional $50,000—and I know we must trust the President—but it is a lot of money not to have any accounting for and entirely free from taxation. I believe the administration should have been more moderate in its demands. It just does not look too good to exempt half of the income entirely from taxation. I am not objecting to it, but it is just a lot of money.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. Not at this time.

The answer of course is that if you cannot trust the President to spend the money any more than a Member of Congress, it ought not to be done. I realize that. I do not know how much it takes to run the White House, of course, and neither does the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]. But I know the President cannot get rich on his salary or on the allowances. There is no doubt about that.

Attention is called to a statement by former President Hoover as an authority for this legislation. Here is what former President Hoover said, and I quote:

> I looked into the income taxes, State and Federal, and I note the salary of $75,000 for the President, after deduction of State and Federal income taxes, leaves about $43,000, whereas if you put his salary up to $150,000 he would have about $68,000 left.

I do not remember that he said anything about allowing him this additional $50,000 expense account, making a total of $90,000 free from taxes. I mention this only because the ex-President has been quoted. We are paying the President of the United States a fair salary and allowing him this extra income, yet the President says we ought to increase taxes on everybody who receives more than $6,000 a year income. It is rather interesting at least.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH].

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, it is significant, in the nature of a forewarning, that one of the very first bills to be called up in this new Democratic Congress is one to increase the cost of Government, and it is called up, without hearing in committee, and under suspension of the rules which limits debate to 40 minutes and precludes any amendments.

The bill before us, S. 103, provides for a salary increase for the President of the United States, the Vice President and the Speaker of the House of Representatives. It is admitted that this bill is the forerunner of legislation to increase the salary of practically all the top officials of the Government.

I recognize that the President, the Vice President and the Speaker of this House are the three most responsible offices in our Government. In many respects they are the three most important positions in the world. Those who occupy these positions should be paid a salary in some measure commensurate with their heavy duties and responsibilities. I would have no objection whatever to a bill providing for a proper increase in the salary for these three offices if it provided for such increase in a proper manner and in the proper amount.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is a fraud on the taxpayers of the United States. This bill is so designed as to lead the people to believe that the increase in compensation is merely nominal, whereas in fact the increase is very, very substantial.

Under the terms of the bill the President's salary is increased from $75,000 to $100,000. and he is given a tax-exempt expense account of $50,000. The taxpayers are thus led to believe that the increase in compensation is only $35,000, and that the total compensation for the President is but $150,000.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that under the terms of this bill a salary of around $300,000 is in effect granted the President. You will note that this is an increase of about 400 percent over his present salary of $75,000.

The sponsors of this legislation have disguised the actual salary increase provided by the bill by setting up a tax-exempt expense account of $50,000. They wish to give the President a salary of around $93,000, after taxes, but instead of making a direct approach to the objective, the disguise of a tax-exempt expense account is used. They are afraid of the public reaction to a bill which would simply increase the salary to $300,000.

Mr. Speaker, I am definitely opposed to the principle of granting tax-exempt compensation to officials of our Government. As Members of Congress we receive a $2,500 tax-exempt expense account. I opposed this measure when it came before the Congress. I am still opposed to it, and I think legislation should be enacted for its repeal.

It is true that as Members of Congress we have extraordinary expenses in connection with our work. We must maintain two homes. We have the expense of traveling back and forth to our respective districts. We sometimes have the expense of extra clerical assistance. We have the expense of election campaigns.

But the policy of providing a tax-exempt expense account is definitely wrong. It is a fraud on the people we represent. They are deceived as to what they actually pay their Government officials.

If we are to provide the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker an increase in salary, it should be on a flat basis, and they should be obliged to pay all the taxes on the salary as all other individuals in this country.

It is perfectly evident that somehow we must bring forcibly home to those who are in charge of the fiscal policy of our Government that taxes represent a heavy burden on our people, and in some cases reach the point of confiscation. If the President were obliged to pay $207,000 in taxes on a $300,000 salary, leaving him take-home pay of only $93,000, he would perhaps have some realization of what existing taxes amount to. Each year, when he files his income-tax return, he would have a gentle reminder that taxes destroy incentive and initiative, and retard progress. He would have a reminder of the heavy load of the cost of government which the American people are obliged to carry.

Mr. Speaker, we are today faced with a national debt of over $250,000,000,000. The President has recently submitted to us the record peacetime budget of almost $42,000,000,000. He, and every other official of this Government, including us as Members of Congress, should be required to help support this great debt and expense of Government. It is wrong to set aside a certain group of Government officials and allow them an income which is not subject to taxes.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, this bill is a fraud on the taxpayers of the United States. I want the people I represent to know that under the terms of this bill the President of the United States is actually being given a salary of around $300,000. The increase in compensation is being provided under the guise of a tax-exempt expense account. I also want my people to know that insofar as the tax-exempt expense account is concerned there is no provision in the bill for any accounting or certification.

What I have said here with respect to the salary or compensation increase provided for the President by this bill applies also to that provided for the Vice President and the Speaker. I am opposed to providing for any tax-exempt payments, just as I opposed the expense account provided for Members of Congress, although it was nominal in amount considering the expenses which we must necessarily incur. This is not a question of personalities. This is a question of principle.

There is also a constitutional principle involved in connection with this bill. In order to protect the people our founding fathers provided that salaries of their elected officials could not be increased during their term of office. This was done to give the people themselves opportunity to pass upon the question as to what their officials should receive. Today, after the election but before the term of the President and Vice President actually begins, we are raising their salary. By rushing this bill through in this manner we are acting contrary to the very spirit of the Constitution. If this measure had been acted on by the Congress prior to the election, it would be an altogether different matter, for the people would then know the salary they would pay to the man selected by them for the office.

We are being pressed to do today that which we will not be able to do next Friday. I must register my protest against both the manner in which this bill is drawn and the manner in which it is being rushed through Congress.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAVALCANTE].

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Mr. Speaker, in support of this resolution, I am wondering whether the gentlemen who oppose it know that under American supervision, Hirohito of Japan receives yearly 20,000,000 yen, the equivalent of 74,000 American dollars, tax-free, with living quarters, food, servants and other expenses.

Franco of Spain received in 1948 the sum of 2,986,000 pesetas, the equivalent of 271,455 American dollars for salary, receptions and other expenses, tax-free, together with living quarters.

The King of England receives £410,000 or the equivalent of 1,722,000 American dollars, tax-free, with living quarters and other expenses.

Peron of Argentina receives 144,000 pesos.

The Governor General of India receives 250,000 rupees, and the President of Chile receives 500,000 pesos. All three salaries are tax-free, with living quarters, food, servants and all traveling and other expenses.

The Congress of these United States is the only law-making body on earth that votes a salary to the Chief of State and then with another vote snatches back approximately 50 percent of it as income tax.

We proud Americans should pay our President $200,000 per year, tax-free, with living quarters, food, servants and all necessary traveling and other expenses.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I would like to observe that this question is merely one of whether or not we shall pay the President of the United States a sufficient salary so that he does not have to go into his own pocket to make up the deficit. I did not vote for the first resolution before the House, although some of the arguments, trivial and petty arguments I might say, from the other side almost convinced me that I should. I did not vote for that resolution because I am opposed to the principle involved.

Why, Mr. Speaker, should we have a lot of irrelevant discussion about a matter upon which there is general agreement? This debate has resolved itself into a series of petty arguments, if you please. Out in Ohio in one of our great farm areas, which unfortunately is not in my district, and I refer to Wayne County, where they grow a tremendous crop of potatoes, there is an old saying that they put all the small potatoes into cans. I suggest that would be a good procedure to follow here with the arguments which have no bearing except for petty political references in the next campaign. As has been said before, I doubt if such vociferous objections to giving the President a raise for the first time in 40 years would have been heard if the gentleman from New York had won the recent election.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Pennsylvania gave a list of the heads of various countries who receive greater salaries than the President of the United States. I wonder if the gentleman realizes that the amount we are paying to the King of England and the princesses over there, over a million dollars, is all being paid by the taxpayers of America under ERP. If we do not stop that, ours will get nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of increasing the salary of the President of the United States. I would give him $250,000 a year under this bill, if I were doing it, but I do not like the feature in the bill which grants a $50,000 tax-free bonus to him. I do not like these tax-free type of salaries to anybody. It is un-American—what is good for one is good for all.

I want to insert in the RECORD as part of my remarks a statement from Mr. Stam, Chief of Staff, Internal Revenue Department, showing just what the taxes would be on salaries of $75,000, $100,000, $150,000, $200,000, and $250,000.

JANUARY 14, 1949.

Hon. ROBERT F. RICH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. RICH: The attached data are furnished in reply to your request of January 13, 1949.

You also asked what gross salary would have to be paid the President of the United States so that he would have after income taxes $50,000 more than he does at present. His salary would have to be approximately $201,567. At present he has left after taxes $48,275. The increase in salary from $75,000 to $201,567 would increase his salary after taxes by $50,000 or to $98,275.

Respectfully yours,

COLIN F. STAM,
Chief of Staff.

[1] Assumes taxpayer has no other income other than his salary—assumes that taxpayer has personal deductions such as charitable contributions, medical and dental expenses, etc., that amount to 10 percent of his salary.

Now, I think we should give the President sufficient money to carry on the affairs of his office, but when you start in to make these tax-free gratuities, you are doing something you should not do. Let the President of the United States get a salary sufficient to carry on his office, but let him pay the taxes the same as every other taxpayer in this country, and let him feel the pinch of taxes. He says that people receiving $5,000 and over should pay more taxes. Let him pay his share of taxes. If that is right, let him pay the same in proportion to others with like salaries. Now he is getting a $40,000 free gratuity. Why, he only spent $32,039 of that $40,000 in 1948, so why then continue to increase that gratuity when he gets his house for nothing? He does not have any expense there in the White House with reference to the running of his house; the Government pays for that. The Government pays for his chauffeur. It gives him a private plane, and a private train, and a private yacht. All those things are being paid for by the Government, and he certainly can get along if we give him $250,000. But let him pay his taxes. It cost the Government $260,400 last year to keep up the White House and grounds; for butlers, servants, yardmen, household furnishings, so the President does not even have rent to pay like the Members of Congress. He has a fleet of limousines and chauffeurs. Let the President practice economy—has he no regard at all for taxpayers? He could not run his own business, now he will break up everybody that now remains in business, then he will find out that foreign countries will not pay his salary.

In the name of all that is good "be wise and economize." I will vote against this bill if the $40,000 tax-free feature is not stricken from the bill.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and include an article by David Lawrence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, it is with some hesitancy that I ask for this time. It is purely a matter of principle. A few years back when one worked for the State he did not have to pay any Federal-income tax. That practice has been corrected, and it was a step in the right direction, because if a man worked for the State I often wondered why it was that he should be relieved of paying Federal-income taxes just because he had a job with a State government. Now then, we drifted along. The next thing we did in the Seventy-ninth Congress was to provide that the people who worked for the United Nations were excluded from paying any Federal-income tax. They probably tell everyone all over the world that they are Americans, but they do not tell them that they do not help to keep the old machinery going. Now we appear to be ready for the next step. I surely cannot ask anyone here to take my judgment as to what the President needs to carry on his office. I do say, however, that as a principle—and I found out in life that you never get in trouble for sticking up for the things one believes in, even if some people call you small potatoes, but sometimes when they get older they will find out that the potatoes are a good deal larger than they think they are—it is unwise to continue on the road of tax exemption. I say to every Member here today that we are going down the wrong road. I do not care who he is, no one is compelled to be a candidate for office if he does not want to, and any time we provide tax exemptions, regardless for whom it is, we are going down the wrong road. It is surely a great start for the Eighty-first Congress; more for the few less for the many.

Mr. Speaker, the article I refer to is as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star]

LITTLE PEOPLE TO BEAR COSTS OF PAY RAISES PROPOSED FOR OFFICIALS—PLAN SEEN GIVING TRUMAN AN INCOME EQUIVALENT TO $240,000 BEFORE TAXES

(By David Lawrence)

This is the administration of the "little fellows"—the one, it will be recalled, that the "little people" everywhere elected last November. And yet about the first thing the Democrats are doing in the new session of Congress is to vote on a proposal to raise the pay of President Truman to an income equivalent to about $240,000 before taxes.

Various devices are suggested to give Mr. Truman $50,000 expense money which he would not have to account for to anybody and which would be free from taxation, and, in addition, a raise in salary.

There is a general move on to raise salaries in the Government and the principal reason cited for it is that it is hard to attract executives of ability into the Government service at present salary rates. But it would appear that there are plenty of men with executive ability—some of them even in Congress—who would be glad to serve as President at the present salary rate of $75,000 a year and only $40,000 instead of $90,000 for expenses. Some of them are Democrats, too, and they are not at all men of independent means. Perhaps it would be embarrassing to mention them, but sometime between now and the national conventions of 1952 their names doubtless will be revealed to the public.

HIS SIGNATURE REQUIRED

The idea of raising the President's pay is presumably something which Mr. Truman himself didn't start. A commission headed by Herbert Hoover has been studying Government salaries and has recommended more pay for the President, the Vice President, the Speaker of the House, Cabinet members, and so on. All this is unquestionably due to the devaluation of the purchasing power of the dollar.

But it has been supposed for years that men who entered the public service did not do so for materialistic reasons. Only people influenced by the profit motive in business were presumed to be materialistic in their attitudes.

Mr. Truman may feel that this is something from which he can remain aloof. But his signature will be required to make the bill into a law. By approving the measure he will be raising his own pay in almost the first legislative act since he was elected.

It would not appear in such bad taste if it were not for the fact Mr. Truman is announcing that he wants everybody in America with an income over $6,000 a year to pay increased taxes. The theory that certain citizens in effect shall be tax exempt and others shall bear the added costs of Government implies that only a few shall be privileged to pay these higher taxes. There was a time when the American theory of good citizenship included the right of every citizen to be permitted to share in the obligations of government. Certainly it would be odd if all labor unions, for example, decided to exempt from the payment of dues those who earned less than a certain amount per week. The idea always has been that those who share the benefits should always pay part of the cost.

MANDATE QUESTIONED

Mr. Truman is asking that an additional $4,000,000,000 in taxes be imposed on both business and individual incomes, and that a $2,000,000,000 increase in social security taxes be deducted from pay rolls each week.

It might be questioned by the voters—including many who voted for a Democratic Congress, as did this correspondent—whether the people gave a "mandate" to increase taxes for everybody over $6,000 and to exempt everybody else from the increase, and whether the people voted to give more pay to the officials of Government, at least in such sums as are being mentioned.

If the budget has to be balanced, the first step is to reduce expenses. If it remains unbalanced even then, the next step is to spread the burdens of taxes equitably so that all citizens pay a fair share of the cost of maintaining Government, a fair share of the expense of feeding Europe and the money needed to prepare the Army, Navy, and Air Forces to give America military security. Certainly many citizens on reflection will want to pay something more at least toward the additional costs of armament. It doesn't look, moreover, as if this is the time to raise by huge sums the pay of those officials who went up and down the country denouncing the Republicans as men who would enrich themselves at the expense of the Government. The "little fellows" may not like it.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BREHM].

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Speaker, just a few years ago the gentleman who then occupied the White House took the position that the top salary for anyone should not exceed $25,000 after taxes.

I remember quite distinctly the conversation of some of those individuals who insisted that I should go along with a Presidential directive fixing this salary as the maximum which anyone could earn. Of course, the question before the House at that time was not one of determining whether a specific amount should be the top salary which a person could earn, but rather should the President of the United States be permitted by Presidential directive to limit one's income to a certain figure, which in this case was $25,000.

To my way of thinking it is inconceivable to put a limit on anyone's ability to produce or earn. If such a directive had been in existence at the time the Pilgrims came to America we would not have made the progress which stamps us as the foremost nation of the world.

What I started to say Mr. Speaker was that the passage of this resolution increasing the President's salary and expense account should put an end for all time to the talk of limiting a man's income to $25,000 after taxes. I notice that some of those who are now apparently 100 percent in agreement with granting this increase, are the same individuals who condemned some of us a few years ago for not giving the President authority to limit salaries to $25,000 after taxes.

I am convinced that some of those who are evidently planning to change our form of government, are even now building up propaganda to put the blame on so-called big business or the profit incentive. These same individuals are not only advocating and pursuing a program which if carried to its ultimate conclusion is bound to result in bankruptcy for our country, but are already softening up the people into believing that it would be the results of the profit system which produced it. The most sure and quickest way to ruin an individual is to get him hopelessly involved in debt. It is also the most sure and quickest way to ruin a nation.

I trust that from here on this Congress may have the wisdom to separate the chaff from the grain, and I sincerely trust that all this talk against limiting a man's ability to earn, produce, and invest for the good of future generations will be considered chaff and dealt with accordingly.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL].

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Congress is asked to rush through this salary-raise bill for the President, Vice President, and the Speaker. It has been brought before the Congress with a time limit so short that it cannot, in fact, be given careful and proper consideration. This legislation should have been brought before one of the sessions of the Eightieth Congress last year when it could have been given careful study and thought before the Members were asked to vote on the legislation.

All of us want to deal generously in fixing entirely adequate salaries for the President, Vice President, and Speaker of the House. We honor and respect these high offices and their incumbents. We want them to have salary schedules compatible with the responsibilities of their offices, and the high dignity of the positions they hold in helping to direct the affairs of our Nation.

Had this matter been considered in the previous Congress, it could have been handled with a great deal less embarrassment to any of the Members of the Congress. None of us, even for good and sufficient reasons, like to oppose the measure now before us.

This bill, as I understand it, would increase the salary of the President from $75,000 to $100,000 annually, and in addition would provide the Chief Executive a tax-free expense account of $90,000. In addition, it would increase the salary for the Vice-President and Speaker of the House to $30,000 a year and would also give each of them $10,000 tax free in expenses. They now get $20,000 and $15,000, respectively, with no expense money.

I regret I cannot support the measure because of the tax-free expense accounts provided in the bill. I would rather raise the President's salary to $150,000 or more; also raise the salaries of the Vice President and Speaker of the House, and eliminate the tax-free provisions of this bill.

I believe it sets a very bad example and a bad precedent. I regret exceedingly I must take this position.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the legislation before us, sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 have been stricken from the measure, so that it now applies only to the salaries and the expense accounts of the three most important officials in the United States—the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

By direction of this House I have been serving for the last year and a half on the Commission established by a unanimous vote of Congress—the Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government. It is perhaps better known in most circles as the Hoover Commission because it is headed by the distinguished former President of the United States—may I say the only living ex-President of the United States—Herbert Hoover.

The Commission has been making a very careful study of all of the various agencies and departments and divisions of the executive branch of the Government. We have used task forces and subcommittees, some 28 task forces and some 30 subcommittees, in these studies. Mr. Hoover has himself served as the chairman of the subcommittee which has studied the President's Office, and, as a result of a report of that subcommittee, it has been the unanimous opinion of the Commission on Reorganization of the Executive Branch of the Government that an increase in compensation should be granted to the President of the United States, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House, and, I might also add, to other top officials in the executive branch of the Government, also.

Mr. McCORMACK Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am very sorry you overlooked the majority leader this time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think both our majority and minority leaders are entitled to some additional consideration because they most certainly do carry a heavy burden of work.

While the Commission has not yet made its full report to the Congress and the Commission did not fix the salaries they believe would be the right amounts for these various officials, I think I can say to you that it was the original opinion of the subcommittee that the President's salary should be fixed at $150,000 per year.

The Commission did not consider the expense-allowance features, which I see are included in this measure, but those of you who have served some time in the House know what my position is on that particular matter. I feel very firmly that any public official, even though he should be the President or just a humble Member of Congress, is entitled to reimbursement for the expenses which he may incur in connection with the conduct of his official duties. I do not believe it wise to hold down the salary of the President of the United States, or the Vice President or the Speaker of the House, to the point where only rich men can afford to serve in such positions.

Therefore, I am supporting the small salary increases proposed in this measure.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to extend their remarks on this particular measure at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES]?

There was no objection.

NEED SALARY INCREASE, TOO

Mr. MACK of Washington. Mr. Speaker, high taxes and high costs unquestionably have made the President's present-day salary too low and it should be raised.

The same high taxes and high costs have made the salaries and expense accounts of other top officials of the Government too low, and, no doubt, these should be raised.

But these are not the only public employees who are suffering from the high cost of living and high taxes. There are thousands of other public employees whose wages are so low or whose expense accounts, so inadequate, that they, too, even as much as the President and topmost officials, are feeling the pinch. They, too, need relief and should have it.

Now, while we are proceeding to raise the salaries and expense accounts of the topmost employees, it seems to me, is an appropriate time to call attention to those Federal employees in the lower brackets of income, in the hope that Congress will give their problem speedy and fair treatment.

In the office buildings of the Congress there are numerous elevator operators whose salaries are only $185 a month. For this wage, these elevator operators work a 7-day week of 7½ hours each day. They get only 1 day off every 2 weeks. In short, 1 week they work 52½ hours and the next 45 hours. If absent because of illness or other reason their pay is docked. Their average wage is barely 80 cents an hour. After deducting their transportation costs for going to and from work 7 days a week, and after withholding taxes, there is not much carry-home pay left.

They, as well as the topmost officials, are entitled to more adequate pay and to some easing of the long-hour week they now work. There is not much fun in life for the man who must, to live, work 7 days a week.

In the Pentagon Building, within the past fortnight, I saw Government employees operating what are known as offset presses. I asked what wage they received and was told $2,100 a year, before taxes.

I have for some years operated a printing establishment. We have presses of the same type as those in the Pentagon Building. The operators of these presses in my shop are paid about $85 a week. I believe that is about the average wage paid by private industry for this work, yet Government workers employed at the same work, I was told, receive only about $40 a week, only half of that paid similar workers employed in private industry.

There are in the Federal service tens of thousands of employees, especially those in the lower brackets, who get wages so low that after taxes, these are adequate only for the lowest scale of living. These workers, as well as those in the topmost brackets, are entitled to a raise.

We want the best employees we can get in Government. That rule should apply to the employees in the lowest brackets as well as those in the highest brackets.

Wars are won as much by the zeal, courage, and loyalty of the private and noncom in the ranks as by the ability of generals, and similarly an efficient, productive Government organization depends on a satisfied personnel, paid adequate enough salaries to prevent a rapid turn-over. A turn-over of thousands in the low classifications of Government is just as costly to governmental efficiency as the occasional retirement of a topmost official.

These low-paid workers need a raise.

In expense accounts, high taxes and the high cost of living have worked just as great, or even greater, hardship on the low-wage Government employee as upon those in the topmost rungs of the salary scale.

For example, Government employees who by the nature of their work are compelled to travel a good deal now are allowed $6 a day for subsistence while traveling on Government business.

This $6 is supposed to pay their hotel lodging bill and for three meals a day while they are on the road. Surely, no Member of Congress believes this $6 is adequate to buy a night's lodging and three meals in any large city of this country. The $6 would not buy that in any second- or third-class hotel. The sustenance allowance of these workers who, to hold their jobs, must travel on Government business should be raised to $8 a day.

Recently, I talked to a Government worker who, from the nature of his job, must travel a good deal of the time. He told me he had kept figures on his cost of living on the road while traveling on Government business. At the end of the year, he found, he said, that he had spent $900 more than he had received from the $6-a-day subsistence allowance. He was wondering if he should deduct this $900 from his income tax and thereby save part of it. The Government should not expect its employees to make such sacrifices in order for them to keep their jobs.

To compel them to do so will, in the long run, prove penny-wise and pound-foolish, for the continuation of this situation will compel many employees to leave the Government service. The Government then will have to employ new persons to fill their places and go through the expensive and often wasteful cost of training untried and inexperienced personnel to fill their places.

The present law allows internal revenue collectors and other Federal employees who use their own automobiles when traveling on official Government business only 4 cents a mile when traveling within their post of duty and 5 cents a mile when traveling outside their post.

This 4- and 5-cents-a-mile allowance for use of a car is substantially below that allowed by most private businesses. It is totally inadequate to meet the cost of car insurance, gas and oil, storage and upkeep, to say nothing of depreciation. The Government should not expect its employees to be out of pocket in order to keep their jobs.

If I had my way I would much prefer that the inadequate salary and expense account situation of those in the lower brackets be taken care of first and that of those in the topmost brackets later. But this, unfortunately, is not to be the procedure.

Let us cherish the hope that the Congress, after taking care of the Government's topmost men, first, will then not forget and neglect those who are in greater need of a fair deal, those employees in the lower brackets.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, if this bill goes through to give the President a $100,000 salary and a $90,000 tax-free expense account, I am informed by the Legislative Reference Service that it will be the equivalent of approximately a $530,000 a year salary. It is important that the issue before us be clarified.

He now is paid a salary of $75,000 and has a tax-free expense account of $40,000. The effect of the twofold proposal in this measure is to increase his salary, not from $75,000 to $100,000, but from $75,000 to over $300,000.

Although a modest increase in his salary from $75,000 to $100,000 a year may be justified, I am opposed to the subterfuge involved in the proposal now before us.

The bill provides that he shall not be required to make any accounting as to the way he spends this extra $50,000, nor, indeed, is he even required to certify that it is actually expended. We all know that it is simply an attempt on the part of the majority to increase his compensation substantially without incurring the opposition which would be Nation-wide if the people were given the facts.

We have no right to be parties to bamboozling the public in this fashion. If we propose to make this move we should do it in a forthright fashion by increasing his salary to $300,000. The very statement of that proposal gives one pause. While ample provision should be made for the Chief Executive of the land, we should not convert the office into one which will be sought by those who have only a financial motive.

Furthermore, it is well for the President, as well as other high-salaried officials, including Members of Congress, to realize that their compensation is subject to tax. A case could be put up for everyone in the country, high-salaried executives and working men and women alike, to be allowed a tax-free sum for expenses. Everyone incurs such expenses in connection with his work, for which he is denied any tax exemption. A simple illustration is the bus fare or streetcar fare or automobile expense which almost everyone incurs in going to and from his work. The President already has this large tax-free fund of $40,000 completely exempt from taxes.

He was not elected on a platform or with the expectation that he should be paid the equivalent of a $530,000 a year salary.

This resolution should be defeated.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I will vote to support the resolution to increase the President's salary and allow an adequate expense account. It is just and fair to do so.

The dignity and importance of the high office of President of the United States entitles the occupant of that office to compensation that is commensurate with the duties he performs. As the highest officer of our Government the responsibilities that he is called upon to carry are enormous. They are not equaled by any ruler in any nation of the world. Yet, many of these in nations far smaller than our own are receiving compensation far beyond that which we contemplate paying the President under the resolution now before the House.

Furthermore, beyond the tremendous physical strain his duties place upon him, there is a heavy financial drain upon his own resources to keep up with what the American people expect of their President. To do this, it should not be necessary for the President to depend upon his own personal financial resources.

To withhold adequate compensation may preclude a man of limited means, such as Mr. Truman, from being a candidate to the office of President. We don't want to ever let it be said that you must be a rich man to be President of the United States.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, in considering S. 103, I believe it to be important to keep in mind the tendency, which seems to be growing, for the Congress to pass legislation which exempts from the provisions of the income-tax law certain emoluments which come to Federal officials which are really compensation for their services. This bill as originally drawn provided that the President should receive compensation in the aggregate sum of $150,000. The bill was modified in the other body so as to make it appear that only $100,000 of that sum is salary and $50,000 was designated as expense allowance and this sum is not subject to tax liability and no accounting shall be made by the President with respect to it.

Apparently in reality it is compensation. When the legislation was presented in the House increasing our own salaries and providing for a tax-free expense account I voted against it for that reason. I believe it is sound from a legislative standpoint, and equitable, to provide adequate compensation not only for our officials who occupy high positions but also for all Federal employees in low-income brackets. Certainly I believe it proper and just to provide adequate salaries for the President and Vice President and the Speaker of the House. I do believe that it is a mistake to provide tax-exempt compensation for these officials or any other officials.

I include as a part of my remarks a statement from the issue of January 21, 1949, United States News and World Report, page 5, which sets forth in detail the compensation and expense allowances for the President and his office:

NEWSGRAM

The country plans to do quite well by its President in 1949 and years to come. Mr. Truman, taking up the job, is to find it not a bad one at all.

Pay is being raised. It's planned to be $100,000, subject to tax, plus $50,000 in tax-free expense account. It has been $75,000 with no expense account. Mr. Truman last year couldn't quite make out on $48,000 left after taxes.

Take-home pay, after taxes, it has been decided, should be at least $100,000. That's what the job is supposed to be worth annually. Mr. Truman is scheduled to get around $110,000 after taxes with the raise and the expense account. He could do what he wants with the expense account, spend it or save it.

Tax-free pay isn't available to the ordinary citizen. To have $110,000 left over, after taxes, a person would need at least $240,000 of taxable income. That's before any new tax increase. Not many people make that much.

What is happening is that Congress is deciding that a person can't really make what he is worth under the present rate of taxes. To enable the President to have pay that is supposed to be adequate, it is proving to be necessary to dodge the tax laws by setting up a tax-free expense account. A straight pay raise to $240,000 seemed to Congress to be too much.

Mr. Truman favors a tax increase for persons with net income above $6,000.

The President's job, if you can get it, offers other things, too.

A house goes with the job. It's a big white house and expensive to run. Upkeep is to cost taxpayers $260,400 in the year ahead. That's for butlers, other servants, yardmen, household furnishings, and other things.

The house itself is run down. It's to be fixed up at a cost of at least $4,000,000. The house sits in a 16-acre wooded estate. Rent is free.

A private airplane is provided, too. It's four-engined and de luxe.

There's a yacht, a big seagoing yacht. The Navy maintains that, and it is always ready when wanted, with full crew. A private railroad car always is ready. There is a fleet of limousines with chauffeurs.

Travel allowance is $40,000 a year. That's for private transportation. It doesn't pay for airplane, yacht, and limousines. It must be accounted for.

The $110,000 net in take-home pay, after taxes, doesn't have to be used to pay for these things. But the President must entertain often at his private expense. He gets reimbursed for official receptions and that's all. The job in some years cost the late Mr. Roosevelt money and it has cost Mr. Truman some money, too. Mr. Roosevelt was the first President who paid an income tax. In pre-New Deal days, when prices were lower and the President paid no tax on his income, many Presidents saved quite a bit of money out of their pay.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, to me this matter seems simple. We are allowing the President the sum of $50,000 annually to take care of expenses he incurs because he is President. If we think he is entitled to an expense account—and I think he is—then we should not give him an amount and then proceed to whittle it down by taking part of it back as taxes.

The logic of some of those that object to this allowance may be sound. But there is another approach to this particular problem than the logic of the situation. It is that the man who was elected President should have an expense account that will help him pay for the necessary entertainment that falls to him as our Chief Executive. In many cities and in my home city we do this for our mayor. We ask no accounting of him and we do not subject this allowance to any taxation. We give him the money and say in effect, "Take this and spend it as you wish to build up the good will of our city and us by being a good host. You represent us by virtue of your election and we will take pride in anything you may do in the way of entertaining people as we know it will reflect credit on you and us as well." We should have that same feeling wtih respect to our President and for this reason I am in favor of granting this allowance, tax free.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, in order to keep the record straight in this matter, I would like to say that it comes before the House at this time because of the urgency of the situation.

If this legislation does not become law before the 20th of this month, then President Truman will not have the benefit of it under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

I would like to go further and tell you that early in December, from December 13 to December 15, a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service held extensive hearings on this subject. They had before them a bill introduced by Senator FLANDERS, then the chairman of that subcommittee. That bill increased the salary of the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker, and some 223 heads of departments and under secretaries.

That bill was the original bill, S. 103. But because the Senate Committee of this Congress did not have time to hold hearings on it, it comes before us now in this abbreviated form, taking care of only the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House.

The last time the salary of the President of the United States was raised was in 1909. A great deal of water has gone over the dam since that time. There have been many changes. It is beyond the memory of some of the people here and some of the younger Members were not then even born. Yet, we continue to evaluate this high office, the greatest office of public trust in the world, in terms of 1909.

There have only been three adjustments in the salary of the President of the United States during the history of the Republic. The salary was first fixed in 1789 at $25,000 a year. In 1883 it was raised to $50,000 a year. In 1909 it was raised to $75,000. Now we propose to make it $100,000.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. MILLER of California. Yes; I yield for a correction.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman from Massachusetts a while ago mentioned that there had not been a raise in salary for 40 years, but that the expense account was raised in recent years from $25,000 to $40,000.

Mr. MILLER of California. I will come to that in a minute. But I fail to see where the statement of the gentleman constitutes a correction, because the last time the salary of the President was raised was in 1909 and this being the year 1949, it was 40 years ago. So the gentleman from Massachusetts was correct in making that statement. The expense account that has been spoken of here is not a general expense account. The money that has been referred to is a travel allowance, which, by law, may be fixed at not to exceed $40,000. But it is limited as a travel allowance. Last year the President only used $32,000, so the surplus there cannot be charged against the general expenses of running the White House.

There is currently running in one of the newspapers a series of articles by the housekeeper who entered the White House with President Roosevelt in 1932. I commend this series of articles to you for reading. You will see that they did not have money enough to properly run the White House, and that they had to get the money out of certain of the food allowances, in order to rebuild the kitchen.

That series of articles will tell you some startling things in connection with the operation of the Executive Mansion, the home of the President of the United States. Former President Hoover appeared before the Flanders subcommittee. I happen to have been the only member of the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service then in Washington, and I was invited, as a courtesy by Senator FLANDERS, to sit with that committee, and I sat with him during the hearings.

I want to say that former President Hoover was referring to the salary proposed by a bill then before it by Senator FLANDERS which fixed the President's salary at $150,000 a year. Frankly, if you go into the record, you will see where former President Hoover suggested that perhaps fixing the salary at a lower figure and giving a tax-free allowance might be the better way to approach this subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is it not a fact that in our State it is the common practice in cities and municipalities to allow the mayor to have a similar fund?

Mr. MILLER of California. Yes. I thank the gentleman for that contribution.

Former President Hoover said:

I should think the American people would be perfectly willing and glad to see the Government give board and lodging to its President. He does not get it now, for he must pay his own board and that of numerous other people.

Then he goes on. The matter appears in the transcript of the hearing.

The so-called task force from the Committee on Reorganization in Executive Departments appeared before the Flanders committee in the person of former President Hoover, Mr. John A. Stevenson, president of the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Co.; Mr. Arthur Flemming, president of Ohio Wesleyan University; and Hon. Robert Ramspeck, our former colleague, all urging that this matter be given immediate consideration by the Congress and that the dignity of the office of President be recognized by fixing his salary on a basis comparable with that office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the resolution passed?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Eleven Members have arisen; not a sufficient number.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SIGNING OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House today, the Speaker be authorized to sign any bills or joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and found truly enrolled.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 51) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That during the Eighty-first Congress the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce shall be composed of 28 members.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. RICH. May I ask why the membership of this committee is reduced below what it was in the Eightieth Congress? I notice that on a great number of committees the membership was cut down on this side much more than it was in the last Congress.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am sure the gentleman will not find that to be true. That is a matter that the leadership on both sides very carefully discussed.

I can assure my friend that there is no discord among the leadership on that question.

Mr. RICH. I looked over the list and found that in some of the committees—not all, but in some—there are fewer Republicans this year than there were Democrats in the last Congress.

Mr. McCORMACK. In the last Congress 56 percent plus of the membership of committees were Republican. In this one 60 percent plus are Democrats. I can assure my friend that on the 15 elective committees there is perfect accord amongst the leadership on both sides.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know whether the minority leader is on the floor at the moment or not, but the matter had not been called to my attention previously. I have just been informed by the ranking member of the committee that he is not familiar with the proposal. I wonder if the gentleman from Massachusetts would withdraw his request until such time as we might have an opportunity to make some determination about it?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws the resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY (at the request of Mr. KEATING) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. PATTERSON (at the request of Mr. LODGE) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. HAGEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an address by National Commander Frackman, of the Regular Veterans' Association, at a State meeting of the Regular Veterans' Association.

Mr. FERNANDEZ asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a sermon delivered at the red Mass on yesterday.

Mr. MITCHELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD with regard to the power shortage in the Pacific Northwest and legislation he has introduced regarding it.

Mr. BLATNIK (at the request of Mr. ALBERT) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

PUTTING ALL OUR SECURITY EGGS IN EUROPEAN BASKET: A RECKLESS GAMBLE

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include an article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, for a long time millions of thoughtful Americans have been properly disturbed by the administration's policy of making every possible effort to help the existing governments of western Europe resist further expansion of Communist control, and no real effort in the last 3 years to help the Chinese Government resist Communist expansion. It has been generally supposed that those responsible for the policy of concentrating on Europe justified it on the thesis that there can be no peace or security until the Soviet Union is forced to retreat within its own boundaries in Europe, and, in fact, until the present tyranny in the Kremlin is overthrown.

I agree with that thesis completely. But it does not follow that in order to save Europe it is or ever was necessary to abandon China to the Communists, except for a few feeble gestures and some relief measures to keep the American people, and perchance the Chinese people, from realizing that since December 1945 our policy in Asia, in fact if not in words, has been one of abandonment of the Chinese Government, accepting and in reality making certain its destruction, though it is an official and loyal ally.

On the contrary, the stupendous victories, both strategic and psychological, which world communism is winning in Asia, make enormously more difficult our efforts to hold and defeat it in Europe. Can it be either necessary or wise for us to put all our chips on the European front? Even though we should win there, it would not be fatal or even too serious for the Soviet regime if it has most of Asia into which to retire and wait while the western nations bleed themselves to death with expanding budgets and diminishing resources. When will we wake up to the magnitude of the disaster befalling us in the Far East and its menace to the success of our policies in Europe?

Under leave to extend my remarks, I include an article by Edgar Ansel Mowrer making public the policy which has long existed and discussing the enormous risk we are taking by gambling everything on getting victory on the European front:

The United States is now firmly committed to gambling the fate of the world upon its success in beating Russia to the punch during the next 2 years.

That statement is based upon unimpeachable information whose source I am compelled to withhold. What it means is that beneath the misleading surface maneuvers of President Truman's administration, there is a basic foreign policy that is clear and coherent, and one of the most decisive in American history.

If this has not been generally recognized, it is because the Government's true foreign policy, so far as I know, has never been publicly stated; and it has not been stated because it is so audacious as to appear reckless.

Many American students of world affairs are deeply worried by what appear to be profound inconsistencies in American foreign policy since Truman, Marshall, and Lovett began revamping it in January 1947. The inconsistency, if not the worry, vanishes when we know what the President and his assistants actually have in view.

Only this revelation which I am privileged to make explains President Truman's apparent negligence in permitting the Communists to take over China, and his seeming indifference to the danger of a resurgent, brutally expansive Germany. Both of these are part of a reasoned scheme.

Under Harry S. Truman, exactly as he promised me back in September 1945, the United States now has a foreign policy extending all over the world. It is definite, it is consistent, and it means business. It is also dangerous. I can sum it up best in the language of bridge and chess:

"West to play and checkmate East in 2 to 3 years."

BASIC UNITED STATES POLICY

West is obviously the United States, with such like-minded peoples as are willing to follow our lead; East is the Soviet Union with its satellite states and its world-wide network of Communist stooges.

Briefly summarized, American foreign policy is frontal pressure upon the adversary along a relatively narrow front, namely western Europe, the Mediterranean, and the Middle East as far as Iran. This pressure is being exerted, and is to be further exerted, by all possible means short of war. It is to be backed by what American leaders believe is the irresistible air-and-atom power of the United States, by the world's greatest fleet, and ultimately by well-armed European holding forces along the area to discourage any sudden sneak attack.

The key to this policy is concentration—squeezing the Soviet Union to compel it first to stop and then to retreat from its illicitly acquired conquests in eastern Europe. The Soviet Union is to be forced into honoring the Yalta and the Potsdam agreements.

All means are being concentrated to this single purpose. Since Germany is to be rescued, German good will is necessary. Therefore the Germans are being babied beyond their deserts. There is—as the planners see it—no risk of a strong Germany involved, since success in stopping Russia will be prompt, after which the policy of favoring the Germans can be reversed if necessary.

EXPEDIENCY VERSUS LONG-TERM AIMS

Ideologies also become temporarily negligible. The United States leaders will gladly accept the assistance, unless harmful to the plan, of any country—reactionary Greece or Communist Yugoslavia—just as they accepted the help of Communist Russia against Hitler during World War II. Since time is short, United States leaders do not feel compelled to make Greece reform or the nations of western Europe unite. Such aims are long-run objectives and Washington is concentrating on the short run.

Furthermore, since even America's means are limited and the real conquest of China by the Communists will (allegedly) take a long time, China can safely be neglected. For, if the policy in Europe is successful, it will lead to a world-wide arrangement with the Russians that will liberate China.

This policy is not the "containment" of Russia advocated a year or two ago by George F. Kennan, of the State Department; it is obviously not "containing" Russia in Asia. This is a policy of direct pressure on one area with all the concentrated peacetime strength of mighty America.

Clearly, too, it rests upon the belief that under such pressure the men in the Kremlin must yield. The argument seems to be that the Soviet Union, like Hitlerite Germany, is a bicycle-like body that can stand up only when advancing at a rapid pace. Make it stand still and it will fall over. American students of Soviet affairs purport to see in the recent hysterical Soviet purges of economics, literature, music, biology, and physics, signs of the first weakening within the country. Therefore, they argue, we must keep up the heat, maintain the Berlin airlift regardless of cost—and victory and lasting peace will soon be ours.

Such a policy is coherent even in its neglect of the United Nations. It neglects literally everything that does not immediately contribute to its success. One can even argue that since it needs the speed, concentration, and resolution of a military campaign, its execution is properly being entrusted to military men.

Its weakness lies in the immensity of the risk it entails. It is entirely postulated on the belief that Russian imperialism can be brought to bay quickly. If it fails, it will leave the United States and the like-minded nations in a desperate position: The European recovery money gone and no European unity to show for it; Germany relatively powerful and likely to ally itself with the Soviets, the greater part of Asia communized, and our Pacific outposts in jeopardy.

That is the gamble taken by President Truman. It is a gamble that has never been authorized or even understood by the American Congress or the American people. It is a gamble even greater than President Roosevelt took during World War II when he banked on his ability to tame the Soviet Union—and failed.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House heretofore entered the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

JUDICIAL USURPATION IN THE CEMENT CASE

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply concerned over the Supreme Court's decision in the so-called Cement case. My home town, Oglesby, Ill., is a city of 4,000 people, most of whom depend upon our two cement mills for a living. The pay rolls of these two cement mills constitute the major part of the financial lifeblood of our community. No wonder I am interested in the Cement case.

I bring this Cement-case decision to the attention of the Members of Congress because unless some remedial legislation is passed at this session to remove the Nation-wide confusion and uncertainty that now obtains throughout American industry, as a result of the order of the Federal Trade Commission and the supporting decision of the Supreme Court, irreparable harm will be done to our American economic system.

Mr. Speaker, for half a century it has been the practice of heavy industry in America—cement, steel, building materials, lumber, newsprint, corn products, and furniture—to quote delivered prices to the buyers of their products. This method of pricing is also used by makers of cigarettes, cough drops, and thousands of other articles that have a Nation-wide sale. The Commission's order has produced chaos and uncertainty in all lines of American industry, and threatens to dislocate and wreck our economic system. At a conservative estimate the various industries affected by the decision in the Cement case represent an aggregate of $50,000,000,000 of American investment, and employ approximately 16,000,000 American workers, with factories located in every State in the Union. Literally millions of workers in industries, such as iron and steel and their fabricating industries, rubber, tobacco, and food products, have been placed in jeopardy by this decision. On the proper solution of this pricing problem by the Congress rests the future development of thousands of cities and towns in which the savings of our citizens have been invested in plant facilities. What affects these industries will affect the workers in them—their jobs, their accumulated technical experience, their homes, their families, and the communities in which they live. One can readily see, therefore, that this pricing problem has Nation-wide ramifications that affect the lives of the majority of our American people. It is safe to say that there is not one congressional district in the United States that is not adversely affected by this attack upon our established pricing practices.

THE CEMENT CASE

Mr. Speaker, the history of the Cement case, briefly stated, is as follows:

A. The Federal Trade Commission charged the cement manufacturers with maintaining a combination to restrain competition among themselves in the prices which they charged for portland cement. The complaint alleged an industry-wide agreement to use, and the actual use of, what is known as a multiple basing-point system of pricing, pursuant to which all cement is sold only at delivered prices, which at any given time and place, are invariably identical as to all defendants offering cement for sale. The primary charge was that the combination in restraint of trade constituted an unfair method of competition within the prohibition of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The secondary charge was that, as a result of the combination, prices charged by each defendant to its customers were discriminatory and therefore violated the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act.

B. The Trade Commission issued an order against the cement companies, restraining them from continuing the alleged combination and from using certain specified methods of pricing and marketing cement in connection with any combination or agreement.

C. The issue was then taken to the courts by the defendant cement companies. After a full and complete hearing the Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh Judicial Circiuit, set aside the Trade Commission's order on the ground that there was insufficient evidence to sustain the charge of combination and conspiracy.

D. The Federal Trade Commission then took the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, which, on April 26, 1948, reversed the order of the court of appeals and directed it to enforce the Trade Commission's order. In doing so, the Supreme Court sustained the Trade Commission's contentions as to jurisdiction; and, in the language of the opinion, the Trade Commission's administrative interpretations were approved. Going beyond the necessary decision of the contested issues, the opinion of the Supreme Court contained a general discussion of the economic theories advanced by the Federal Trade Commission in its argument before the Court. The effect of this discussion, which lawyers commonly call "dicta," was to create confusion throughout American industry as to the extent of the meaning and application of the Court's opinion.

WILL RESTRICT BUSINESS

Mr. Speaker, the results of extended and reliable inquiries show that if the Trade Commission's position is not corrected by the Congress, delivered pricing methods and practices, not only in the cement industry, but in many other industries, that have been established for more than half a century, must be abandoned; manufacturers will be compelled to substitute uniform f. o. b. plant pricing; buyers will have to contend with the complications of freight rates and routings, which many of them are not equipped to handle; sellers will be confined to sales areas in which they have a freight cost advantage over their competitors, and they will be shut out of many markets where they have heretofore been able to offer their goods for sale in competition with manufacturers who have a delivery cost advantage. Many long-established business enterprises will be compelled to restrict their operations and in some cases close down or move from their present location closer to sources of supply of manufactured materials which they reprocess.

As a concrete example of what will happen all over the United States, I cite the two cities of La Salle and Oglesby, my home community, where three cement plants were located many years ago. These three plants produced most of the cement manufactured in Illinois. They served the Chicago area market before the United States Steel Corp. plants in Lake County, Ind., were established. When the steel corporation built these new plants within the Chicago switching district, they acquired a freight cost advantage in delivered cement to the Chicago market. Thereafter, the Oglesby and La Salle plants had to make delivered prices in the Chicago area, such prices reduced to meet the lower delivered price which the steel company was able to make by reason of its delivery cost advantage. As a result, cement buyers in Chicago were able to take advantage of this competition, have their choice between the products of a number of cement manufacturers, and compete with one another on the basis of equality in the price which they pay for cement.

Enforced f. o. b. plant pricing, which the Trade Commission advocates, will drive the La Salle and Oglesby plants from the Chicago area market. In normal times cement consumption outside the Chicago market area would be insufficient to keep even the smallest of the three plants in full operation. Under those conditions whatever cement the plants produced would have to be sold at higher prices because production costs would be higher as a result of the reduced rate of operation. My home town of Oglesby would then take on the semblance of a ghost town, and the workers and the small-town merchants dependent upon the employees of the cement plants would be in the same condition as displaced persons.

Mr. Speaker, I attended Senator CAPEHART'S committee hearings on this Nation-wide pricing problem and listened with a great deal of interest to the testimony presented. I concur fully with the statement of Mr. William Schoenberg, general president of the United Cement, Lime, and Gypsum Workers International Union, when he said:

There is a genuine danger confronting every cement worker as a result of the Supreme Court's decision in the Cement case.

Concerning this genuine danger Mr. Schoenberg testified as follows:

Cement plants are located mostly in small communities that have grown up around the cement plants. As these cement plants grew up, the workers in them built homes for their families, schools for their children, and churches for worship, which represent all their savings and in which their entire equity in life is tied up. The moving or closing of any of these large cement plants, or placing them upon a part-time production basis, would seriously affect these workers, and would create ghost towns all over America.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal Trade Commission has been crusading for many years against these long-established pricing practices, practices in which the producer absorbs the freight. The Commission proposes to substitute f. o. b. plant prices for the delivered prices. Twice the Commission has attempted to persuade Congress to pass legislation to bring about this change, but Congress has refused to do so because the Commission has failed to prove that such a change in pricing practices would be an over-all benefit to the American people. In 1936, when such proposed legislation was before a Senate committee headed by Senator Burton K. Wheeler, the Senator said:

I hope I am not foolish enough to think that I can confine the industries of this country to the particular radius of the locality in which they operate. That is preposterous on its face.

The Commission has now succeeded in getting the Supreme Court to render a decision which, in substance, does what the Congress has twice refused to do. This tendency on the part of the courts of today to usurp the functions of the Congress was very aptly put by the judge in the case of the Aetna Portland Cement Co. against Federal Trade Commission, supra, at page 573, when he said:

In our judgment, the question as to whether the basing-point price system should be declared illegal rests clearly within the legislative domain. We know of no criticism so often and so forcibly directed at courts, particularly Federal courts, as their propensity for usurping the functions of Congress. If this pricing system which Congress has over the years steadfastly refused to declare illegal, although vigorously urged to do so, is now to be outlawed by the courts, it will mark the high tide in judicial usurpation.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the facts presented at the hearings before the Senate committee, facts that I have tried to present in condensed form, in view of the Nation-wide effect that the Supreme Court's decision in the Cement case has had and will have upon half of the Nation's industrial life; in view of the adverse effect the decision is bound to have upon some 16,000,000 American workers; in view of the chaos and confusion that is present today in American industry as a result of this Cement case decision, and in view of the fears that beset American industrial plants and their employees today, as a result of the Federal Trade Commission's order and the Supreme Court's decision upholding the legality of that order, I urge this Congress to take immediate action to clear up and remove the chaos, the confusion, and the fear that is now prevalent throughout American industry as a result of the Supreme Court's decision in the Cement case.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 51) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the Eighty-first Congress, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce shall be composed of 28 members.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

CONSPIRACY TO CORRUPT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I have arisen at this time and in this manner in order to address the House on what is really a question of personal privilege. However, my remarks will be devoted to a proceeding which occurred during another Congress, and I am informed that under a technical interpretation of parliamentary procedure I am not entitled now to invoke the right of personal privilege.

On October 22 last, less than 2 weeks before the 1948 national elections, a subcommittee of the House Committee on Education and Labor held a hearing in my congressional district in San Francisco. The members of the subcommittee present were former Congressman Charles J. Kersten, of Wisconsin, who presided as chairman, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FISHER].

The announced purpose of this subcommittee hearing was to investigate Communist infiltration into labor unions which serve the industries of the United States. During the hearing a witness, William Patrick Brandhove, accused various labor union officials of being members of the Communist Party. Toward the end of his testimony, Brandhove introduced my name into the record by making the following statement:

We have traced $180,000 of the union's funds that have been spent by the Communist Party for numerous front organizations and in assisting the political campaigns of such individuals as FRANCK R. HAVENNER when he was friendly with them; Oleta O'Conner Yates, county chairman of the Communist Party; Scottie Sneddon, who ran for the legislature in Portland; the National Negro Congress, and organizations too numerous to mention.

Soon after Brandhove completed his testimony, the meeting was adjourned. A few minutes later I learned that my name had been used, and I tried vainly to get in touch with the members of the subcommittee in order to demand that I be given an opportunity to be heard. I was informed that the committee members had left San Francisco, and that no further hearings would be held until after the elections. As a matter of fact, so far as I am aware, no more meetings of this subcommittee were held in San Francisco.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not so much concerned about this clumsy attempt to smear me — because it failed of its purpose at the polls — as I am about the obvious fact that certain unscrupulous politicians in my district have been able repeatedly to use committees of the Congress of the United States as tools in a political conspiracy to besmirch the reputation of a Member of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I never received any notice that a meeting of this subcommittee of the House Committee on Education and Labor was to be held in the congressional district which I have been five times elected to represent in this House. Even if this had been due merely to an oversight, it would have been a breach of one of the basic rules of congressional courtesy. But, Mr. Speaker, there are abundant reasons to believe that the failure to invite me to attend this subcommittee hearing was far from being an oversight; that, on the contrary, there was a deliberate purpose to keep me in ignorance of the meeting until it was over, so that I would have no opportunity to refute any slanderous testimony against me or indeed to have any reason to suspect that any such slanderous testimony might be given. I might describe this whole proceeding as a deliberate hit and run operation.

Mr. Speaker, I shall now proceed to show that the campaign manager of my opponent for Congress in the recent election knew all about the fact that this congressional subcommittee would hold a hearing in my congressional district shortly before election day, and that he offered financial inducements to William Patrick Brandhove to appear as a witness at this committee hearing, and to give testimony which would link my name with alleged Communists and with organizations which were alleged to be subversive.

I shall also show that the witness William Patrick Brandhove was notified to attend and did attend a conference with the chairman of the subcommittee, former Representative Kersten, of Wisconsin, and certain other individuals, in a San Francisco hotel on the night prior to the subcommittee hearing and that he did then and there discuss in advance with Kersten and the others the program for the hearing.

I now read a copy of an affidavit, dated October 24, 1948, made before a notary public in San Francisco in the presence of witnesses, by William Patrick Brandhove:

OCTOBER 24, 1948.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
City and County of San Francisco,
October 24, 1948:

In March 1948, I was approached by Warnock Walsh, San Francisco police commissioner, who suggested that I go to see William Mailliard, now a candidate for Congress on the Republican ticket from the Fourth (San Francisco) District. Walsh saw me in person at the E. F. Hutton Co. in San Francisco. At his suggestion, I went to see Mailliard at the office of Mailliard's father, Mailliard and Schmiedell, 320 California Street.

Mailliard suggested that I run for Congress. His reason was so I could tag FRANCK R. HAVENNER, Congressman from the Fourth Congressional District, as a Communist. He wanted me to do this in the same way that I tagged HAVENNER a Communist during the campaign for mayor in San Francisco in 1947 when I ran for the board of supervisors. Mailliard's plan was that when we had thoroughly tagged HAVENNER as a Communist then

I would withdraw in Mailliard's favor and Mailliard would become the candidate. In this way, HAVENNER might be defeated in the primary, leaving the field to Mailliard.

Mailliard suggested I see Don Nicholson, now campaign manager for William Mailliard. I met Nicholson about 2 days after my meeting with Mailliard. Nicholson told me that, in his opinion, it would be foolish for me to run for Congress and suggested I wait until the general election so that I could assist the Mailliard campaign by labeling HAVENNER a red.

After a trip to sea aboard the Kelso Victory which lasted approximately 3 months, I returned to San Francisco on June 16, 1948.

WM. PATRICK BRANDHOVE.

R. M. SPILLANE,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

My commission expires July 17, 1951.

At this time I shall read a copy of another affidavit, also dated October 24, 1948, made by William Patrick Brandhove before a notary public in San Francisco:

In early July, I went to Mailliard's office. We discussed the issue of labeling HAVENNER as a red. Mailliard wanted me to commence working during the month of October for his campaign committee. Mailliard suggested I see Nicholson about this plan.

The next day I saw Nicholson. Nicholson told me to contact him the first of October. Nicholson said the job would be to label HAVENNER as a red. I left the mechanics to him.

I called Don Nicholson in the first week of October. Nicholson said that in his opinion the best thing to do would be to go after HAVENNER in the last week of the campaign.

Nicholson said that if the occasion arose, and I had the opportunity to do it, that I should trace funds of the marine cooks and stewards union to a campaign of HAVENNER—that I should make the charge that marine cooks and stewards funds were used for some HAVENNER campaign.

At that time Nicholson told me the opportunity would arise to tag HAVENNER. He told me the Kersten committee would come here. I knew that. We talked about what the committee was coming for and I told Nicholson that I would take advantage of that opportunity to smear HAVENNER.

On Tuesday, October 19, I had another meeting with Nicholson and he told me that he would provide me with a sound car, which ostensibly would be used to campaign for an assembly candidate and that I should tag Assemblyman George Collins and Congressman HAVENNER as reds in a tour around the city. The sound truck was to be made available on Monday, October 25. Nicholson said he would give me some operating money on October 25 and after the campaign he would give me $1,000.

Nicholson told me that the committee hearing—the Kersten committee—would be my opportunity to take care of HAVENNER in the manner we had discussed.

During my testimony on Friday, October 22, before the Kersten committee at the post-office building at Seventh and Mission Streets in San Francisco, the opportunity presented itself to follow out Nicholson's suggestion. I stated that the Communist Party leadership of the marine cooks' and stewards' union had donated moneys to a Havenner campaign.

By tying Congressman HAVENNER's name to the Communist leadership of the marine cooks and stewards and Oleta O'Conner Yates, a known Communist, I felt that I was doing the job that Nicholson required of me.

But I know that FRANCK HAVENNER is not a Communist and I know that he is opposed to communism. Furthermore, I know that the Communist Party is opposed to the election of FRANCK R. HAVENNER.

Immediately after the hearing at the post office, I telephoned Nicholson. I told him what happened at the hearing. He said I did a good job.

In that conversation I asked him what the next step would be. He said to come in Monday about the sound car and that he planned to use this stuff toward the close of the campaign.

This statement was given by me voluntarily, without any promise of remuneration, and is, to my own knowledge, true and correct.

WM. PATRICK BRANDHOVE.

My commission expires July 17, 1951.

In a supplementary affidavit, also dated October 24, 1948, and sworn to before a notary public in San Francisco, Brandhove described a conference which he had with Congresman Kersten, chairman of the congressional subcommittee; Howard Rushmore, an employee of the Hearst newspapers; and others, at the Mark Hopkins Hotel, San Francisco, on Thursday evening, October 21, the night before the congressional subcommittee hearing was held in San Francisco:

OCTOBER 24, 1948.

I wish to give the details of my meeting at the Mark Hopkins Hotel, San Francisco, with Congressman Kersten and others on Thursday, October 21.

Martin Kaplan telephoned Congressman Kersten at 4:30 p. m. Thursday, October 21, and arranged for myself, Alex Harris, and W. H. Handelsman to meet with Congressman Kersten's committee that evening at 9 p. m. at the Mark Hopkins Hotel. Kaplan told us about these arrangements, then he left for Los Angeles.

The three of us went together to the hotel—myself, Harris, and Handelsman. When I walked into the room on the sixth floor, I was surprised to see Howard Rushmore. I had known him before. Also present were Harper Knowles, Congressman Kersten, and the three of us.

We had been there about 10 minutes when the phone rang. Howard Rushmore answered. He said it was Harry Lundeberg. In a few minutes, Lundeberg came up but Lundeberg was let into an adjoining room by Rushmore.

We carried on a conversation for fully a half hour. The conversation was strictly political. I thought I was to talk over testimony with both Members of Congress. But the Democratic Member was not present.

Kersten started off with a statement about how terrible the waterfront situation was on the west coast. He said if the Republican Party got elected, they'd remedy this situation. Kersten talked about what a good man Dewey was and what he proposed to do about Communists. He came right out and said these committee hearings received Nationwide publicity and showed the American people that the committees of Congress do something about the Communists. I asked him where the Democratic member of the committee was and Kersten said he was out with some friends. Kersten made no bones about the fact that the committee hearings would help the Republican Party in winning this election in November.

R. M. SPILLANE,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

My commission expires July 17, 1951.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time during my service as a Member of Congress that a congressional subcommittee has been used for the purpose of making a surreptitious political smear attack upon my reputation. It was only last June that the House Committee on Un-American Activities, by unanimous vote of all the members present, expunged from the records of that committee all of the perjured testimony concerning me which was taken at a secret meeting of a subcommittee of the old Dies committee, held down in Beaumont, Tex., in July 1940. For a detailed account of this amazing proceeding I shall now read a statement placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on June 18, 1948, by Hon. JOHN W. MCCORMACK, the former and present majority leader of this House:

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to announce that a black blot upon the records of a former committee of the House of Representatives has been officially erased during the present session of Congress. On June 15 the Committee on Un-American Activities, by unanimous vote, ordered that testimony attacking the reputation of Representative FRANCK R. HAVENNER, of California, which was given at a secret meeting of a subcommittee of the old Dies committee, held in Beaumont, Tex., on July 16, 1940, be expunged from the records of the committee.

Thus a regrettable chapter in the history of the so-called Dies committee has been obliterated by official action.

During the summer of 1940, while the Seventy-sixth Congress was in session and while Representative HAVENNER, a Member of that Congress, was at his post of duty here in the National Capital, he received information that an attempt would be made to give certain derogatory testimony concerning him before the Dies committee. Mr. HAVENNER informs me that he went to see the chairman of the committee, Representative Dies of Texas, and inquired whether there was any truth in this report. Mr. Dies replied that he had heard nothing about it. Mr. HAVENNER then requested Chairman Dies to notify him if anyone attempted to give any testimony concerning him before the committee, in order that he might appear before the committee and exercise his right as a Member of Congress to testify in his own behalf. Dies assured him that this would be done.

Afer talking to the chairman, Mr. HAVENNER visited Representative Dempsey of New Mexico, the ranking member of the Dies committee, and Representative Voorhis of California, also a member of the committee, and made the same request of them. Both also assured Representative HAVENNER that they would notify him immediately if they learned that any testimony concerning him was to be heard by the committee.

Now comes the most amazing feature of this regrettable episode in congressional history.

Not until more than 4 years had elapsed did Representative HAVENNER learn that, shortly after his conversation with Chairman Dies, a meeting of a subcommittee of the Dies committee, which was not public, was held in Beaumont, Tex. At that meeting, which was attended, as Mr. HAVENNER states, only by one member of the committee, the secretary of the committee, Robert E. Stripling, and the then investigator for the committee, James H. Stedman, a witness named John L. Leech testified under oath that it was his understanding that Representative HAVENNER had been and was at that time a member of the Communist Party.

Mr. Speaker, this is not in Mr. McCORMACK's remarks, but the RECORD shows that the Member who attended that secret subcommittee meeting in Beaumont, Tex., was Mr. Dies himself.

I resume quoting from Mr. McCORMACK's remarks:

The first time that Congressman HAVENNER knew that this meeting had been held on July 16, 1940, and that damaging testimony concerning him had been taken under oath, was when political advertisements, containing excerpts from the testimony given by the witness Leech were printed in San Francisco newspapers in October 1944, during Mr. HAVENNER'S campaign for reelection to Congress.

Mr. HAVENNER never received any notification from Mr. Dies or from any other member or employee of the committee, or from anyone else, that this meeting was to be held in Beaumont, Tex., on July 16, 1940, and he was never given any opportunity to appear before the committee to refute this damaging testimony.

The record of the subcommittee hearing, which was not a public meeting, held in Beaumont, Tex., on July 16, 1940, was kept on the secret file of the committee for more than 4 years, and was never officially released by the Dies committee for publication.

Just how the supporters of Mr. HAVENNER'S opponent in the 1944 campaign for Congress learned about the secret subcommittee meeting and obtained the record of its proceedings for publication has never been officially disclosed.

When Mr. HAVENNER was returned to Congress in January 1945 he took the floor of the House of Representatives and denounced the testimony of the witness Leech as perjury in its entirety. On that occasion every member of the old Dies committee who was present arose and stated that they had never heard of the secret subcommittee meeting held in Beaumont, Tex., on July 16, 1940, and had never known anything about the testimony concerning Mr. HAVENNER until he made his speech on the floor of the House.

When Mr. HAVENNER had concluded his statement many Members of the House of Representatives voluntarily arose and expressed their confidence in Mr. HAVENNER'S patriotism and integrity.

Not a single Member of the House attempted to condone this testimony given in an attempt to smear their fellow Member, and many Members denounced it as an outrageous proceeding.

I participated in the discussion on the floor of the House on that occasion, and in the course of my remarks I said:

"There should be an investigation of the conspiracy to smear a gentleman who was a former Member of Congress and who is a Member of Congress today. The gentleman from California is the one who happened to be in that position today, but it might have been any other Member of this House.

"If that testimony was false it means that there was a conspiracy among certain individuals in California to smear the gentleman for a particular purpose. It seems to me to be a matter of interest to each and every Member of the House and I think, speaking as an individual, if anything is done, that the committee should go further and if they do find falsehoods, look into them. They will find falsehoods, for the gentleman has denied that the statements were true. They should investigate the conspiracy because it concerns every Member of this body.

"As far as the gentleman himself is concerned, I have served with him, and I believe I speak the sentiments of every Member of this body. The gentleman may differ with me on this or that question, or differ with some of us who serve with him, but because we differ on public questions does not mean that we are not good Americans; it means simply a difference in our individual conscience and our individual judgment as to the best interests of the country. We may disagree as to judgment, but every man here has a love of America and is actuated by the same high patriotic motives as the gentleman from California, who enjoys the confidence of every Member on each side of the aisle, as far as I know, who serves with him. I rise particularly to make this contribution because the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] enjoys our respect and confidence and because we recognize that he is both honorable and trustworthy."

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yeld?

Mr. HAVENNER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. As I understand, this meeting in Texas was a secret or executive meeting. There was no official release of the testimony. Has the gentleman information as to how it got out?

Mr. HAVENNER. I stated in my statement on the House floor 4 years ago, which appears in the RECORD at that time, that I had never been able to find out how it was released.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I will say the gentleman is entitled to know how it got out all right.

Mr. HAVENNER. I thank the gentleman.

The conviction which I expressed in these remarks back in 1945 that this whole unsavory affair indicated that there had been a conspiracy to misuse the privileged authority of a congressional committee in order to defame a Member of Congress is strengthened by certain information which Representative HAVENNER has recently given me. He states that with the permission of Chairman THOMAS he talked with the clerk of the Committee on Un-American Activities, Mr. Stripling, who was present at the secret subcommittee meeting of the Dies committee down in Beaumont, Tex., on July 16, 1940.

Mr. HAVENNER asked the clerk of the committee who had arranged to bring the witness, Leech, whose home was in Los Angeles, out to this secret meeting in Beaumont, Tex., to give perjured testimony against a Member of Congress. The clerk, Mr. Stripling, replied that it was the duty of the investigator, James H. Stedman, to produce witnesses for the committee hearings. When Mr. HAVENNER asked to see Stedman, he was informed that the former investigator had not been employed by the committee for several years. Congressman HAVENNER inquired where Stedman was located, and was informed that after he left the committee he was employed by the Honolulu Oil Co., in Los Angeles, and was still in the employ of that company.

The president of the Honolulu Oil Co. is Mr. Albert C. Mattei, a gentleman who has been very active in Republican politics in northern California for many years. Congressman HAVENNER states that Mr. Mattei has been the chief financial and political supporter of every Republican candidate for Congress who has run against HAVENNER since our colleague was first elected to this House back in 1936. Mr. Mattei was the chief financial and political backer of Mr. HAVENNER'S Republican opponent for the Congress in 1940, when the secret subcommittee meeting of the Dies committee was held down in Beaumont, Tex. Mr. Mattei was again the chief financial and political backer of Mr. HAVENNER'S opponent for Congress in 1944, when the defamatory perjured testimony taken at the secret subcommittee down in Beaumont, Tex., first saw the light of day in a political advertisement designed to defeat Mr. HAVENNER as a candidate for Congress.

And now it develops that when former Investigator Stedman, who is reported by the clerk of the Committee on Un-American Activities to have produced the witness who gave the defamatory perjured testimony against Congressman HAVENNER at the secret subcommittee meeting down in Beaumont, Tex., severed his connection with that committee, he was employed by the Honolulu Oil Co., of which Mr. Mattei is the president.

I leave this astounding sequence of facts to the judgment of Congress and the American people.

Congressman HAVENNER is one of the ablest Members of the Congress. Sincere, courageous, a fighter for the people, and loyal to the best interests of the people, he is a credit to the people of his district. Congressman HAVENNER is a great American.

It is an interesting and significant fact, Mr. Speaker, that the campaign manager for my opponent in the congressional campaign of 1940, when the perjured testimony against me was taken without my knowledge at a secret meeting of a subcommittee of the old Dies committee down in Beaumont, Tex., was the self-same Don Nicholson, who managed the campaign of my Republican opponent for Congress last year. Nicholson also managed the campaign of my Republican opponent in 1944, when the perjured testimony taken by the Dies subcommittee in 1940 was mysteriously made public for the first time in newspaper advertisements published in San Francisco just before the election of 1944. Prior to that time I had no knowledge that any such testimony had ever been given concerning me, but obviously my opponent's campaign advisers knew all about it and were able to procure its release from the secret files of the Dies committee for use in political advertisements. Now Mr. Nicholson is accused by the witness, William Patrick Brandhove, of having offered him financial inducements to give smearing testimony against me before the Kersten labor subcommittee last October.

Mr. Speaker, on January 11, 1945, I stood in the well of this House and recited, in detail, the astounding story of the secret meeting of the Dies subcommittee held down in Beaumont, Tex., more than 4 years before, when perjury was permitted to be perpetrated against me.

On that occasion, after I had concluded my statement, Members of the House from many sections of the country arose and voluntarily expressed their confidence in my patriotism and loyalty to our Government. All of them declared their abhorrence of the idea that a congressional subcommittee, in secret session, should receive defamatory testimony against a Member of Congress without ever letting him know that he had been attacked or giving him any chance to appear and testify in his own behalf. Among other speakers at that time, the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Honorable JOHN W. MCCORMACK, majority leader of the House, made the following statement:

There should be an investigation of the conspiracy to smear a gentleman who was a former Member of Congress, and who is a Member of Congress today. The gentleman from California is the one who happens to be in that position today, but it might have been any other Member of this House.

Four years have elapsed since I arose to a question of personal privilege on the floor of this House and denounced the use of a congressional subcommittee to receive defamatory and perjured testimony against a Member of Congress, who happened to be myself, and permit that vicious testimony to become part of the official committee record, without letting the Member know that he had been attacked or allowing him to appear in his own behalf.

Now I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the facts which I have presented here today clearly show that I have again been made the target of a political smear attack through the medium of a congressional subcommittee hearing held in my congressional district just prior to the last national elections. I was not notified by the members of the subcommittee that any defamatory testimony had been given concerning me, nor was I extended the opportunity, which is the right of every Member of Congress under similar circumstances, to appear before the subcommittee in my own behalf and endeavor to refute the smear.

So it becomes apparent, Mr. Speaker, that there must be among my political enemies in California and elsewhere certain individuals who have repeatedly conspired to have false and defamatory testimony given before congressional subcommittees concerning a Member of Congress, in this instance myself.

In this connection, the following matters would appear to be worthy of investigation:

First. The former investigator for the Dies committee, James H. Stedman, was, according to Mr. Stripling, the clerk of the Dies committee, responsible for bringing the witness who gave the perjured testimony against me to the secret meeting of the Dies subcommittee in Beaumont, Tex., in 1940. After Investigator Stedman left the Dies committee he was employed by the Honolulu Oil Co., of which Albert C. Mattei is president.

Albert C. Mattei was head of the finance committee for my opponent for Congress in 1940, when the secret Dies subcommittee meeting was held in Beaumont, Tex. Mattei was then and has ever since been closely associated in politics with Don Nicholson, who was the campaign manager for my opponent for Congress in 1940. Mattei has been the chief financial backer and Nicholson the campaign manager for all of my opponents for Congress at general elections in recent years.

Second. The sworn statement by William Patrick Brandhove, the witness who linked my name with the names of alleged Communists at the meeting of the Kersten labor subcommittee in San Francisco, that Don Nicholson promised to pay him $1,000 if he would tag me as a Red during the recent congressional campaign, and that Nicholson repeatedly told him that a hearing of the Kersten subcommittee would provide the opportunity to do this.

Third. The presence of Howard Rushmore, an employee of the Hearst newspapers, at the conference which Brandhove and other prospective witnesses had with Chairman KERSTEN and others on the evening before the congressional subcommittee hearing was held in San Francisco. At about this time and, indeed, on numerous occasions during my campaign for reelection to Congress last year, the San Francisco Examiner, a Hearst newspaper, published various editorial attacks upon me, one of which contained the following statement:

A vote for Havenner is a vote for Bridges and the Kremlin.

It was not until after the election was over that the Examiner published a front page retraction of this editorial. I have filed suit for libel against the San Francisco Examiner, and intend to press that suit to a final conclusion.

It may have been only a coincidence, but certainly a very peculiar one, that the first knowledge I ever had of the perjured testimony which was given against me at the secret Dies subcommittee hearing held in Beaumont, Tex., in 1940, was received when I read a political advertisement, containing excerpts from that perjured testimony, in the San Francisco Examiner during the latter part of October 1944, just prior to the congressional elections of that year.

Mr. Speaker, the law enforcement agencies in various parts of this Nation have been extremely vigilant in recent years to protect the integrity of basketball, football, and baseball games, boxing bouts, and other sporting events against corruption by gambling interests. Heavy penalties have been imposed upon individuals who offered bribes to players who participated in those games. It would seem that the integrity of congressional procedure ought to be just as important to the American people as the integrity of professional sporting events, and that an offer of a bribe to a witness to give defamatory testimony before a committee of Congress should rank, in the eyes of the law, as of at least equal importance with an attempt to corrupt a professional athlete.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I have not occupied the time of this House today for the purpose of seeking personal vindication through any action that this body may see fit to take. The voters of my district have demonstrated their contempt for the cowardly smear attacks that have been made upon me, and have expressed their confidence in me by repeatedly reelecting me to represent them in the Congress of the United States.

But, Mr. Speaker, the evidence and the record which I have placed before you today make it unmistakably apparent that there has been a continuing conspiracy among my political enemies to corrupt the integrity of congressional committees through the use of bribery and perjury. The attacks which have been made upon me by these vile methods, and which were designed to besmirch my name, to destroy my reputation, and to bring humiliation and shame upon my loved ones could have been made upon any other elective public official. What has happened to me, my colleagues, might happen to any one of you if you had the misfortune to incur the political enmity of individuals so devoid of human honor and decency as the authors of these foul attacks.

I am not a revengeful person. While I abhor the conduct of these conspirators, I might be content to leave them alone with their guilty consciences, but for the fact that over a period of nearly a decade these same persons have repeatedly plotted to undermine and break down a thing which ought to be sacred and inviolate—the integrity of the Congress of the United States.

Men have been imprisoned for contempt of Congress because they refused to answer questions put to them in committee hearings. Surely the measure of contempt is vastly greater when men bribe witnesses to give false, slanderous, and perjured testimony before congressional committees.

Having been the victim on several occasions of testimony of this nature, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully urge that a select committee be appointed, or that a standing committee of the House be authorized, to investigate this conspiracy to produce false, slanderous, and perjured testimony at hearings of congressional committees or subcommittees, and to report to the House its recommendations for legislative or other action to prevent similar corruption of committee proceedings in the future.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAVENNER. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I agree with the gentleman about the appointment of the committee to investigate attempts to corrupt committees of Congress. I ask whether the gentleman agrees with me that when one Member of Congress goes out publicly and charges another Member with treason, whether he ought to be investigated on that, or is it just when my ox is gored?

Mr. HAVENNER. I would say to the gentleman that in my opinion, the editorial which I quoted from the San Francisco Examiner by inference and by direct implication accused me of treason.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman has not yet answered my question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HAVENNER. I am seeking a remedy for any attacks of this kind.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That is attacks on the Congress?

Mr. HAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Or on Members of Congress?

Mr. HAVENNER. I am not seeking personal vindication.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I understand that.

Mr. HAVENNER. I would like to see the rules amended so that we may be protected against this sort of thing in the future.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I understand, the gentleman is taking care of his part of it. You are talking about Congress generally.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAVENNER. I yield.

Mr. FISHER. The gentleman has mentioned my name as a member of the subcommittee. I would like to say to the gentleman that until this morning I did not know his name had been mentioned in the hearings. I recall the testimony of the witness Brandhove, but the reference to the gentleman who is now addressing the House did not catch my attention and I did not know until this morning that he had been referred to.

With regard to the San Francisco hearings, I point out that those hearings were held by the subcommittee after hearings had been held in Alaska during the west coast shipping strike, with which the gentleman is familiar. Alaska was paralyzed from the strike, and the subcommittee had strong evidence indicating that it was a Communist-inspired strike, directed by Harry Bridges. It was, therefore, very proper and pertinent to our inquiry that hearings be held in San Francisco.

The gentleman has seen fit to refer to my colleague Mr. Kersten, of Wisconsin, who is not here to answer the charges that are being directed at him. I want to make it plain that it was my idea, not his, that we stop over in San Francisco for those hearings. The hearing there was highly necessary and as the record will disclose was conducted fairly and in accordance with the best rules of procedure. It was objected to, of course, by the Communists, and they picketed the courthouse 700 strong during the brief hearings.

The reason why the hearing was concluded rather suddenly, as the gentleman has pointed out, was because of the absence of witnesses. Subpenas were issued for 16 witnesses, including Bridges, but they went into hiding, all but three, and could not be found by the United States marshal's office. I am certain that if the gentleman had gotten in touch with either Mr. Kersten or myself, or had gotten word to us, the hearings would have been reopened and the gentleman would have been heard. We were there at the hotel overnight after the hearings were concluded, and up to noon the following day, but the gentleman did not contact us.

I will say further to the gentleman, since he has made a rather severe attack upon Mr. Kersten, who is not here to answer for himself, that my dealings with Mr. Kersten on that subcommittee convinced me that he is eminently fair and that he is not the type of man who would engage in any conspiracy to smear any man.

Mr. HAVENNER. I would like to say to the gentleman that I tried to make it plain that his name has not been used in this affidavit in any way, except that he was present at the meeting of the subcommittee, but did not attend this conference which Mr. Kersten did attend on the evening prior to the meeting.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAVENNER. I yield.

Mr. LESINSKI. The gentleman must realize that the Committee on Education and Labor in the last session of the Congress had $75,000 and the gentleman remembers how some of the Members rose on this floor and said, "Where are we going to get the money? Where are we going to get the money?" Yet they were able to cover this country from coast to coast, from east to west, from north to south, doing one-man grand jury investigations. We in Michigan are used to that. When a judge is on the other side of the fence he can force a witness to say "Yes," and when he says "No," he gives him 30 days for perjury.

Mr. HAVENNER. I will say to the gentleman that the continuing experience I have had with smear attacks of this same nature, some in the past even more severe and more damaging than this, have convinced me that there is a conspiracy to corrupt congressional committees, in my part of the country, at least. I would like to see an investigation made to find out who is responsible for this corruption. I repeat I am not seeking any personal vindication here.

Mr. LESINSKI. Does the gentleman remember this great Hollywood investigation? It cost a good many thousands of dollars. Has a report been made on it yet? I made that trip at my own expense, and it was a fluke, the same as many investigations.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAVENNER. Gladly.

Mr. BIEMILLER. I regret very much that the former Representative from the Fifth District of Wisconsin was responsible for this latest attempt to smear the very distinguished gentleman from California, but I am not surprised that it happened.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker; a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. If the gentleman is going to attack a former Member of the House who is not here, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAVENNER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am well acquainted with the situation that confronts the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER]. It is one that every one of us should feel keenly about. The gentleman from California is one of the most honorable Members of this House. We do not have to call one another names because we do not agree. I never impugn the honesty of any of my colleagues. I may disagree with their judgment, that is a right I have, but I do not impugn the honesty of their motives. The gentleman from California has been subjected locally in California to most unfortunate situations. Several years ago it was with local individuals, and last fall again with local individuals.

The very fact he was reelected on both occasions shows the confidence the people have in him. I know how I would feel if in my district someone or a group entered into continual conspiracies in an effort to destroy me through undermining my character and smearing my reputation. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] is completely justified in giving to the House the affidavit that he has received, which is convincing evidence that locally in his city and district there are some individuals who engage in a continuing conspiracy against him.

A group of men trying to beat a candidate is one thing, that is all right, but to smear and destroy the reputation of someone is something entirely different.

I am glad to testify today, whatever consolation it might bring to the gentleman from California, although it is not necessary, and to his dear ones who are the people who keenly suffer, and to the people of his constituency, that the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] is one of the most sincere Members of the House of Representatives, keenly devoted to his duty and loyal to his people. He is one of the finest Americans that I have ever met.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PRIEST). Under previous special order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of my remarks I might insert two resolutions I have presented, and also a letter I have mailed to the chairman of the Rules Committee.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is in the resolution? May we see them first?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I will be glad to answer the gentleman. The first one is to appoint a select committee and the second resolution is for the purpose of outlining investigating committee procedure, aimed at no particular committee. It has nothing directly to do with Mr. HAVENNER'S case that was just presented. The resolution outlines a code of procedure which I think would be well for any committee to use and which most committees do use in the conduct of their hearings and in the investigation of their witnesses.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman is not asking for a vote on that today?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

A SELECT COMMITTEE SHOULD BE FORMED FOR THE PURPOSE OF STUDYING COMMITTEE PROCEDURE

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the Members of the House have just listened to a carefully prepared and well-documented speech by my colleague from California, the Honorable FRANCK HAVENNER. There is an old saying which tells us that lightning never strikes twice in the same place, but the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] has proved to this House that political lightning does not follow the afore-mentioned rule.

The gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] has been the victim of the abusive, vicious, and irresponsible use of the power of a congressional committee twice.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order in attacking the action of committees of the House. If I get the statement correctly that is what he is doing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman would be going quite far afield if he said a Member of the House would not have the right to criticize the actions of a committee of the House. The gentleman from California will proceed in order.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the first abuse was committed by the former chairman of the Committee on Un-American Activities, Mr. Martin Dies, of Texas. Ex-Congressman Dies was a Democrat, and this is important because our colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER], was and is a Democrat. Being a Democrat during the regime of a Democratic administration did not protect the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] from the abuse of power by a congressional committee.

In the first instance, an irresponsible statement made before a one-man subcommittee was released at the opportune time to Mr. HAVENNER'S political opponent and to an antagonistic newspaper for the sole purpose of smearing the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] and causing his political defeat.

It is very interesting to note how the same pattern was followed in the second instance of abuse. Once again we see a subcommittee which ostensibly had two members, former Congressman Charles J. Kersten, the Republican chairman of the subcommittee, and a present Congressman, our colleague, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. O. C. FISHER, a Democrat. The evidence presented by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] shows, I understand, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FISHER] was not present at the hearings of the subcommittee when the irresponsible and libelous testimony of Mr. Brandhove was given. So for all practical functioning purposes, we have a one-man subcommittee operating again.

We also have the same pattern followed by the release to the antagonistic newspaper, and undoubtedly to Mr. HAVENNER'S political opponent, of the character-assassinating, libelous testimony of a confessed professional witness. This release occurred just before election day at a time when it was planned, as the testimony shows, it would be the most damaging to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER].

I point out again that this pattern of abuse by a congressional committee or subcommittee does not depend on political or partisan affiliation. It has no allegiance to party. It is something completely segregated from the struggle for party advantage, although it can and has been used occasionally in a partisan manner.

The abuse of committee power goes far deeper than partisanship, both in its methods and in its results. It has not been confined to a single committee or subcommittee either. Various committees and subcommittees have abused the tremendous power which of necessity must be deposited in the legislative body. I am not today concerned with the academic question—although it is important—of reducing the investigative powers of a committee of Congress. I realize that great responsibility is placed in the Congress, and that great power is necessary to discharge that responsibility.

But, we, as Members of Congress, cannot escape our responsibility as representatives of the American electorate, by condoning, excusing, or ignoring flagrant abuses of this great power. The American people are judging the institution of Congress, I am sorry to say, not by our constructive accomplishments, but by the abusive procedures of certain congressional committees and by the reprehensible conduct of certain individuals who too often, in my opinion, hunt the headlines of the sensational press.

In this period of world chaos, when the democratic processes are on trial throughout the world, we cannot afford the luxury of indifference to public opinion. Public opinion is powerful. If the public loses confidence in Congress as a democratic institution, it will be but a matter of time until the institution itself will fall. Therefore, when we find thoughtful people, great national periodicals, great nationally distributed newspapers, and even Presidents of the United States condemning the procedures of certain congressional committees, it is time for us to scrutinize carefully the cause of such criticism.

Have we been criticized without cause?

Has the conduct of our committees been fair and in accordance with recognized principles of American fair play and justice?

Have congressional committees conducted their investigations and hearings in conformity with the recognized principles of American jurisprudence?

Have our congressional committees practiced in their hearings the democratic processes guaranteed to our citizens by the Bill of Rights?

I believe the answer to these questions is very important. I believe that it goes beyond the personalities of those who have been guilty of abuse of power, and beyond the personal fortunes of those who have been victims of the abuse.

I share with my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER], the indignation which he rightfully feels at being the target for abuse by a congressional subcommittee, not once, but twice. I know that he will be vindicated for the second time by proper action on the part of his colleagues in Congress. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] is one of our most respected and valuable Members. The California congressional delegation is proud of his record of patriotic service to the people of California during a long life of valuable public service. The people of San Francisco have expressed their confidence in him by electing him five times to the Congress of the United States. He also served his State many years on the highly important California railroad commission.

The gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] is highly capable of fighting his own battles and his colleagues who rise with him today in protest do so voluntarily because we share his indignation, not because he needs our assistance.

But, as I said before, the abuse of congressional committee power goes beyond the personality of the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER], Mr. Kersten, or any other individual.

And at this point I want to say a word for the unnumbered American citizens, prominent and obscure, who do not have the congressional rostrum to present their defense against the abuses they have suffered. Abuses they have suffered at the hands of men who thought more of tomorrow's headlines than they did of today's civil rights.

These are the people who have felt the whiplash of vicious newspaper releases. These are the victims of unfounded and irresponsible testimony, yes, and even printed committee reports, all of which tended to degrade and humiliate them in the eyes of their professional colleagues, their friends, and their loved ones.

Many of these people suffered character assassination without recourse. Safe behind congressional immunity, which is granted Members of Congress and witnesses before congressional committees, these people read with a feeling of horror that their patriotism, their loyalty to their Nation, their integrity as citizens had been attacked. Many of them tried to fight back. They asked for the right to answer the malicious charges. They asked for the right to refute the derogatory testimony. They wanted the opportunity to expose their accusers by cross-questioning. But these people were denied the simple American rights we give a chicken thief before a police court. They cannot rise on the floor of the House of Representatives as the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] has done and defend their good name.

That is why I arise today, as I have arisen many times before, to plead for those who have been denied the opportunity of pleading for themselves.

Not only do I plead the cause of the victims of congressional committee procedure abuse but I plead the cause of the Congress of the United States before the bar of public opinion. I plead the cause of democracy, which is on trial throughout our beloved country and the world.

Let us prove to American citizens that their rights are God-given and irrevocable, that their rights as witnesses before congressional committees are just as sacred as they are before a police-court judge.

Let us prove to them that the Congress of the United States can correct its own procedures. Let us prove to them that the dignity and respect which most of the committees of Congress enjoy and deserve shall not be lost because of certain abuses which have been practiced by a very few.

How can we do this?

I believe the subject needs careful study. I know that long-standing precedents and procedures deserve careful consideration before alteration. I do not believe drastic procedural change or curtailment of useful powers is necessary. I do believe that fair procedures which are now used voluntarily by the great majority of congressional committees should be made obligatory on all committees.

Certainly we can require in the interest of the dignity and reputation of Congress before the American bar of public opinion that decent, fair procedures shall be the rule for all committees. A rule now followed by the majority of the congressional committees voluntarily because of its innate decency and justice cannot be objectionable if it be made obligatory on those individuals, committees, or subcommittees which have failed to act wisely and according to the best traditions of American jurisprudence.

Many of my colleagues have joined me by introducing resolutions for the purpose of setting up fair rules for conduct of committee hearings and examination of witnesses. Our majority leader, Mr. McCORMACK; Mrs. DOUGLAS, of California; Mr. CARROLL, of Colorado; Mr. BIEMILLER, of Wisconsin; and others have shown their concern by introducing resolutions on this subject.

I have introduced three resolutions outlining different approaches to the committee procedure problem. Their numbers are H. R. 74, H. R. 191, and House Concurrent Resolution 4. They are similar to the resolutions introduced by my afore-mentioned colleagues, and also similar in some instances to resolutions introduced for the same purpose in the other body.

As it is obvious that there are several approaches to this timely and important problem, I introduced on opening day, January 3, 1949, a resolution, House Resolution 16, which seeks to create a select committee to conduct an investigation and study of committee procedure as used by committees of the House of Representatives. This select committee would be empowered to hold hearings and recommend by an early date a code of fair conduct under which all committees of the House would proceed.

Upon the completion of the committee's hearings and upon receipt of its recommendations, the House would have the opportunity to evaluate its report and could subsequently take such action as it might deem advisable.

I believe this is the right way to solve this problem. Such action would, in my opinion, mean a great and cleansing step forward in the eyes of our people and in the eyes of the world.

I have written a letter to the great Committee on Rules asking for the privilege of presenting my case for a rule.

I sincerely hope that I shall have the support of every Member of this House, both Republicans and Democrats.

Democracy is challenged in many places, and wherever democracy can be strengthened, that is where we should stand and fight without partisanship, whether it be on the battlefield or in the legislative Halls of Congress.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 15, 1949.

Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH,
Chairman of the Committee on Rules,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: On opening day I introduced House Resolution 16 which seeks to create a select committee for the purpose of studying House committee procedure and recommending to the House a code of fair conduct to be observed by all committees.

I respectfully request that I be given an opportunity to appear before your committee for the purpose of requesting a rule for the consideration of House Resolution 16.

Sincerely yours,

CHET HOLIFIELD,

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I agree with the gentleman that it is necessary to have these rules, all right, but it does seem to me that the majority of the Members of Congress or all the Members of Congress ought to be able and ought to have good sense enough to hold hearings that are in accord with fair play.

You speak about smearing. What about these people on the outside—columnists, and radio commentators, and newspapers? I recall very distinctly that I introduced a bill 2 years ago, when the gentleman's party was in power, trying to give the right to those who were slandered to bring suit in the Federal district where they lived. I could not get that through.

Now you are talking about smearing. What about this attack being made today on Mr. Kersten, a former Member, who is not here. Is that smearing, or is it not?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I realize that the gentleman has already had time—1 hour—on a question of personal privilege, I believe, on this particular matter.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I will get another one next week.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. And I know that the gentleman can take care of his own fortunes.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. You have no fault to find with our committee; have you?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we have been waiting here for an hour or two for a Democratic caucus. If we are going to carry on speeches of this kind indefinitely, we ought to know it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. There are other special orders.

Mr. RANKIN. We have more special orders, and if we are going to keep this up, perhaps we ought to call off the caucus, and hold it tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. There are two more special orders.

Mr. RANKIN. I have no objection to the request of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman from Mississippi, as well as the courtesy of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], in bringing these matters up. I do not intend to take the time of the House unduly. I would say that my concern today is to bring before the House a method of controlling its own procedures. We have no direct control over outside agencies, such as newspapers and other people. But we do have control of the procedure of committees of the House of Representatives, and my attempt is to bring before a properly constituted select committee a study so that judicious determination might be made as to whether committee procedure rules would be advantageous to the House in establishing and maintaining the dignity of the House of Representatives. We should not proceed as we have in the past with certain individuals, certain subcommittees and committees using measures which, in my opinion, have brought disrepute and loss of dignity to the Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WALSH (at the request of Mr. MADDEN), for 3 days, on account of sickness in family.

To Mr. LEFEVRE (at the request of Mr. COLE of New York), for January 17, on account of absence from city on official business.

To Mr. POWELL (at the request of Mr. MULTER), for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

To Mr. SHORT (at the request of Mr. ARENDS), on account of attending funeral in district.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 103. An act to increase rates of compensation of the President, Vice President, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and

S. J. Res. 16. Joint resolution making January 20 and 21, 1949, holidays for Federal employees and employees of the District of Columbia in the metropolitan area of the District of Columbia.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present. If we are going to have to listen to this for 30 minutes more, the other Members ought to come here and share this with us.

Mr. MULTER. If the gentleman will withdraw his point of order, I assure him I will keep my remarks within 12 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. No. I am not going to withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 18, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

72. A letter from the Chairman, United States Maritime Commission, transmitting a report of the United States Maritime Commission on the activities and transactions of the Maritime Commission under the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, October 1 through December 31, 1948; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.
